Tea Shop Gossip Attaches Evil History To Lost Stone

FOLLOWING CLUES

Suspects Questioned But No Arrests Have Been Made As Yet

Woo Sing-faung, proprietor of a Chinese curio shop at 1864 Bubbling Well Road, is hovering between life and death today at the Red Cross Hospital from a bullet wound in the head, the victim of an extraordinary crime that was planned and carried out in a most daring manner by a white man, an American or a Briton, who carried away the jewels worth over Taels 5,000 and for whom the police are combing all corners of Shanghai.

Woo Sing-faung was shot down in the middle of the afternoon in the West Western Road by the mysterious assassin who snatched the packages containing the jewels and fled.

Police investigation through the day yesterday brought to light a singular element in the strange crime that may or may not have a bearing on the case in the future. It was disclosed that one of the pieces of jade, a huge shimmering stone oblong stone that was one of five stolen necklaces has a most sinister history. According to stories that came from Chinese jewel merchants who knew that this stone was in the possession of Woo Sing-faung it was said that a evil fate has followed all those who have owned it through the centuries since it was taken from the bed of a northern stream, in time to come into possession of an ancient Chinese Emperor.

CRIME CAREFULLY PLANNED

The foreigner for whom the police are searching made every preparation for the crime and it is feared that he may have made such provision for his subsequent escape that he may now have fled from the city.

Woo Sing-faung's shop is a modest establishment, but to jewel buyers and others it has been known that for discriminating buyers he was able to bring to light jewels, and particularly jade pieces of astonishing value and beauty.

The criminal, said to have been a man of about 35 years of age, well dressed with white serge trousers, dark coat and straw hat, appeared first on Saturday afternoon at the curio shop on Bubbling Well Road. He spoke English fluently and his air of quiet assurance in examining jades and jewels offered for his inspection gave the impression that he was a man of affluence, probably a wealthy collector. His request to be shown articles of greater value than those that he found in stock in the shop was not taken as unusual, and in answer to this request the proprietor courteously informed him that at another time jades of the most precious sort might be seen.

Woo Sing-faung explained that his most valuable pieces were kept at another place, but he promised to produce them for the customer's examination.

APPOINTMENT IS MADE

An engagement was made for Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock and at this hour the gentlemanly foreigner again appeared at the shop. His expectations were not in vain for a display of gold and jade necklaces, bangles and other ornaments of truly regal magnificence in keeping with the impression the stranger had created was produced.

The customer remarked that his house was not far away—on Great Western Road.

After he had made a searching examination of the valuables he chose five jade necklaces, in one of which was set the great sombre jade piece the jewel merchants tell about. With these he took also several gold and jade bangles and a pair of costly jade earrings.

A price of about Taels 5,000 was agreed upon for the lot and the customer then asked the

LOS ANGELES TO HAVE TERMINAL FOR AIRCRAFTS

City Grants Request Of Aero Club Of Southern California

Assurance has been given, including official approval of the city of Los Angeles that the request of the Aero Club of Southern California for including an air terminal in the projected union transportation terminal plans for Los Angeles will be acceded to, and that if a union terminal is ordered an adequate air terminal will be constructed. Inasmuch as this may be three to five years off the Club has under way a request for an aircraft landing field adjacent to the business center of Los Angeles and the acquisition of an emergency landing field at Exposition Park. This is a very important matter to Los Angeles.

FOR LANDING FIELDS

The [illegible] Ventura, Ontario, [illegible] other towns in establishing landing fields and taking an interest locally in flying. Special events have been carried out at Ontario and Ventura, and are being planned at other towns where landing fields are established. Venice is opening a very large municipal field and a branch of the Aero Club will be placed in a building set aside for that purpose by the Venice City Aeronautical Commission.

San Diego has some large plans, and the Aero Club is co-operating with the Chamber of Commerce of that city in working them out. The campaign for a non-stop flight from England to San Diego of the Navy's rigid dirigible the R-38, has official approval, this means a great deal of airship progress on the Pacific coast and calls for a $1,300,000 hanger among other improvements at San Diego.

52 LANDING FIELDS

Fifty-two permanent or emergency landing fields west from Texas and south from San Francisco and Stockton have been listed by the club. The San Diego-Los Angeles, San Francisco flying route has been mapped, and a seasonal record of flying conditions is being kept. The approaches by air from the East are being charted by the Club. Considerable data on flying conditions in this territory has been collected, and as soon as funds will permit a flying guide book on California, Arizona and New Mexico will be published by the club.

The club has started a log and wind service to flyers in this territory and intends to develop it so that by winter it can offer information of value to any flyer, whether in Arizona or Northern California as well as at any point in Southern California, regarding conditions along his proposed route and at his destination. This will especially develop as to flying over the mountains and to or from points where low fogs prevail. A telephone call to the club office or a telegram will get this service so far as it has been developed.

PLANS ARE LAID

Already flyers going to Bakersfield, Santa Barbara, Ventura and San Diego, have been able to lay their plans by the information furnished by the club. Col H. B. Hersey, of the Weather Bureau is giving the secretary invaluable assistance in this. Reports from Mt. Wilson and from aerological station of the Army Balloon School are also used. If a forest service telephone system can be installed a special lookout service from the Tehachapi Mountain crossing will be added

Slayer Of Czar Holds High Post With Soviet, Says British Officer

Bolshevists Confirm Allegation That Report Of Execution Of Murderer Was Incorrect, Informer Asserts

(Reuter's Service)

London, August 26.—A crop of new accounts of how the Czar met his death have been appearing recently in prominent newspapers.

Most of these accounts agree with regard to the main features but Captain Francis McCullagh, a British officer, who has recently arrived in London from Siberia, where he was living in disguise last spring, has given Reuter fresh particulars.

He states that in July, 1918, the Soviet Government approved the trial and sentence of the Tsar. In September, 1919, the same Government announced in the official newspaper, Pravda, that the Czar's murderer had been tried at Perm and executed for this crime.

Captain McCullagh, however, states that he talked with the murderer in March last and that he was then occupying a responsible position under the Soviet at Ekaterinburg. The man's name was different from that, published in the Pravda, but Bolsheviks pointed him out as the murderer of the Czar.

This was confirmed by an important Soviet Government official, M. Efraim Efraimov, head of the Russian Socialist Telegraph Agency there, and there is also other corroborative evidence of identification.

The square, opposite the house where the murder was committed is now named "The Square of National Vengeance."

Minsk Delegates Demand Change Of Seat To Riga

(Reuter's Service)

Warsaw, August 29.—As result of the Polish Delegation at Minsk telegraphing that they had been described as spies by the Soviet Government and that the mast of the wireless station at Minsk had been broken under suspicious circumstances, the Polish Government have telegraphed to the Bolshevik Foreign Minister that the venue of the peace negotiations must be changed and proposing that they should be transferred to Riga.

Paris, August 25 (delayed).—So desperate are the straits of the Bolshevik forces between the Narew and East Prussia that they can only choose between annihilation and capitulation.

It is rumored in Waraw that the commander of the Russian Army in the North has entered into negotiations with General Sikorki for the capitulation of his entire force.

PLANS FORMED TO WELCOME FORMER FRENCH PREMIER

Preparations are being made for the entertainment of M. Paul Painleve, the former French Minister who is due to arrive here Friday from Tientsin. M. Reau, the French Consul-General will be host at a reception to be given at noon on Saturday. The reception will also take the form of the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the French Republic.

The French Consul-general will again be host at a dinner to be held in his consulate on Sunday night, to which the local Chinese officials and prominent French residents are invited.

The Chinese local authorities and organisations are also planning to give the French statesman and scholar a hearty welcome. He sails on the Andre Lebon, which is scheduled to leave here on September 10. He is accompanied by M. Borel.

LOCAL CHINESE OFFICIALS WILL FETE SIFFERT

Admiral K. K. Lang, commander-in-chief of the Chinese Navy; General Ho Fung-lin, the local Defense Commissioner and Mr. Hsu Yuan, Commissioner of Foreign Affairs, will be hosts at a dinner to be given at the Naval Club on September 11 at 8 o'clock in honor of M. D. Siffert, the Belgian and Senior Consul at Shanghai.

Invitations to local officials and consular members as well as administrative officers will be issued and a large number is expected to attend the function.

Protection Rather Than Profit Is Argument Advanced For Program

(Reuter's Service)

Melbourne, August 27.—The Commonwealth Government has presented to the Senate a statement, showing that it controls 23 Government-owned and 16 enemy-owned steamers.

It is proposed that an additional 11 steamers of 12,000 tons and 18 smaller cargo vessels shall be constructed locally for the Government.

The net profit for the financial year, 1918-19 was over £1,000,000 but the estimated profit for the year 1919-20 is £250,000 owing to the strike.

The Government points out that the establishment of the Commonwealth line is not to make profits but to prevent the isolation of Australia owing to disruption of the world's shipping lines: and that it will have a beneficial effect in preventing a combination of shipowners, detrimental to Australian interests.

Foreigners In Siberia Are In Peril, Japanese Are Told

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Vladivostok, August 30.—The Consular Corps has sent a letter to General Oi, the Japanese Commander-in-Chief at Vladivostok, asking protection for foreigners.

The letter points out the lawlessness which exists in Vladivostok and the district round and states that the Consular body applied to the Russians, who promised to take measures for the protection of foreigners, but that these measures have so far proved ineffective.

General Oi has sent a letter to the Government, stating his intention of complying with the Consuls' request and suggesting the co-operation of the Russian authorities. Otherwise, he states, he will act independently. He emphasises that this action on his part will in no way free the authorities from responsibility for the security of foreigners.

Deer, Called By Bugle, Give Unique Angle To Welcome By Japanese

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Kyoto, August 30.—Each succeeding day in Japan is voted the best by the congressional party as the program for their reception develops, today, which was spent at Nara, being no exception. There the party was welcomed by the governor, the mayor and leading citizens, who were the hosts at a tiffin in honor of the Congressmen at the Nara Hotel.

During the day a visit was paid to the temples of Daibutsu. A most unusual and pleasing feature of the day's program was the assembly before the Public Hall of 600 deer, which flocked in at the sound of a bugle. The ladies of the party mingled with the jostling deer, and presented a delightful picture as they fed the animals.

Mr. Julean Arnold, the commercial attache to the United States Legation at Peking, who is conducting the party, will leave tomorrow for China, Doctor J. F. Abbot, commercial attache to the American Embassy at Tokio, will succeed him as guide. A meeting of the congressional party at Nara voted their appreciation of and thanks for Mr. Arnold's great help.

Wireless Telephone For Fire Trucks, Chief's Plan

Following a series of successful experiments in establishing wireless telephonic communication between fire stations of the International Settlement it was announced yesterday by Fire Chief M. W. Pett that fire trucks of the department will be equipped with wireless telephones conforming with the latest practice of fire departments of the largest cities in the world. This will enable the department at all times to keep in touch with its men while fighting fires and with stations at which receiving equipment will be installed.

The experiments of the Shanghai department with wireless telephone began all of six months ago. Apparatus was put in place at the Hongkew station and connected up with Central headquarters. This apparatus has been brought to such a stage of perfection that it is now contemplated linking all the fire stations of the city with wireless telephones.

The next step to be taken, however, Chief Pett said, would be to place wireless equipment on one of the trucks of Central station and after this has been worked out successfully the system is to be developed to take in all sections of the department.

Wireless equipment has been brought into use at the present time by the fire departments of London and New York as well as in several other large cities. The first wireless telephone conversations held in China are said to be those opened by Shanghai's fire department, first with a vessel in the Whangpoo, and later the line of communication opened with the Hongkew station.

Confidence At Home And Abroad Predicted For New Cabinet

(From Our Own Correspondent)

Peking, August 26.—Your correspondent has received from the Honorable Paul S. Reinsch, American Legal Advisor to the Chinese Government, the enclosed copy of his memorandum to the Government on the need of representative institutions. The document was submitted to the President and Cabinet on the 24th and, through the courtesy of H. E. Chow Tze-chi, Minister of Finance, is now released for publication:

BY PAUL S. REINSCH

THE Chinese Government has just passed through another serious crisis, and there has now been constituted a Cabinet the personnel of which, both by character and experience, will inspire confidence at home and abroad. The Cabinet proposes to address itself to the task of reconstruction, of which the government and nation are indeed in great need.

It is, however, necessary that we should ask ourselves whether the entire situation of the government has as yet been placed upon a sound foundation. On this point it is feared that the gravest misgivings must still be entertained. Notwithstanding the high character of the men who compose the government, it is unfortunately quite certain that the country as a whole is far from satisfied with the soundness and permanency of the solution hitherto arrived at. No matter what proposals of reconstruction under whatever form, may be made, this feeling cannot be removed unless the essential character of the government can be put on an unquestionably sound foundation.

PEOPLE HAVE SUFFERED

The Chinese people have in the recent past suffered great injury because of personal controversies among politicians and the self-seeking action of governors and other officials, who have spent the public resources for advancing their personal ambitions instead of improving the condition of the country. The Chinese people realise the great economic opportunities which now lie before the country in the development of its resources. They see with distress that, instead of promoting and facilitating this great development, the politicians and men in power waste the substance of the state in useless controversies, and create bankruptcy where there should be wealth and power.

In view of these facts the people of China will not have confidence in any program which does not include the essential element of restoring the representative character of the Chinese Government. A modern government can enjoy authority at home, and respect abroad, only as it stands forth as the representative of the entire nation. This character cannot be acquired by force, corruption or intrigue, but it can be bestowed only through a free grant of the community, acting continuenuely through legal institutions. Military and financial resources may be temporarily provided, but they will fail again and again to constitute a sound basis for the authority of the state; and the continued attempt to govern the country in this way would leave it weaker after every crisis, and will rapidly lead to collapse, bankruptcy, and the loss of national sovereignty The only lasting source of authority in a modern state is the respect for law as the expression of the public will. If for this authority is substituted personal power and ambition, financial intrigue and military despotism, no peace will be found and the condition of the country will constantly become worse. In order to escape from this condition, we have to return to a straightforward acceptance of the principle that the law must be adhered to, regardless of personal advantage and ambitions, and the continuity of the legal institutions of the country must be preserved.

FATALLY DEFECTIVE

At the present time the government is fatally defective through the lack of a representative parliament. As long as a representative institution is lacking, only a de facto government exists, attended by all the weakness of a temporary arrangement without the strong foundation of legal principle and of universal public support. The disadvantages of this situation may be briefly summarized as follows: (1) As long as there is no representative parliament recognised by the nation, the recognition given to the government by foreign nations can also be only de facto, temporary and informal.

As the government fails to attain authority throughout the nation, that recognition may at any time be withdrawn; the government is therefore in an essentially precarious situation and does not enjoy the independence and stability which is due to a true government of a great nation. (2) While this condition lasts, the financial basis of the government cannot be sound. Financial support from the nation, by way of adequate taxation, can be provided only through a representative body. Nor are foreign nations justified in extending credit to a government which is incomplete in this most important respect, and whose action can therefore at any time in the future be justly repudiated by the nation which had not been represented in the action taken. (3) International relations are exceedingly complicated. Unless the action taken by the government can be given the full confidence of the nation, even good and desirable solutions will be impossible. Concessions made to other nations will not be understood by the people and will be taken to be a further selling of the birth right of the Chinese nation, unless indeed they can be explained satisfactorily to a representative body in whom the entire nation has confidence. Development in the international relations of China, and the satisfactory settlement of outstanding problems, are therefore impossible as long as no authoritative parliament exists.

NEED MORE VOICE

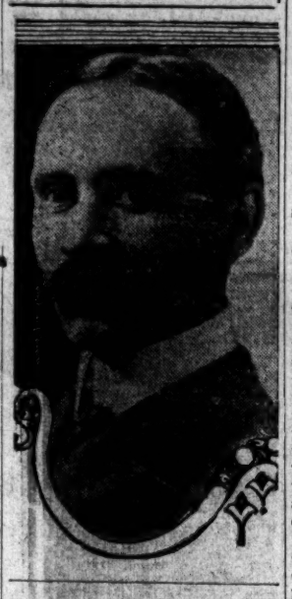
In further explanation of the above principles, the following considerations are herewith submitted: The weakness of the Chinese Government during the past years is due to the fact that, while the government is a republic in form, there has not been a continuous representation of the people in the government. The formal expression of public consent is at all times essential to a modern government. The absence of a representative body of recognised standing is therefore a source of fatal weakness.

From the point of view of foreign relations, only temporary de facto and informal recognition has been or can be given to a government which is lacking in this essential constitutional element. Such recognition is not permanent, and could be withdrawn at any time. It rests only on convenience, as it is necessary in international affairs to have someone to deal with. It does not, however, involve any kind of approval or support.

PUBLIC AUTHORITY

Public authority can rest only on force, tradition or public consent when authority rests on force it is necessarily unstable as force changes all the time. Therefore modern nations have long abandoned force as the basis of authority, and use force only in the support of other principles. The second basis of authority is tradition, on which authority rested during the period of the Empire in China. It is similar to the authority exercised in the family. But in a modern state authority can rest only upon public consent expressed in a system of law recognised by all to be binding. In a modern state, the organ which expresses this public assent is therefore essential, and a modern state cannot be complete without a representative body.

DR. PAUL S. REINSCH



Firm Foundation Needed To Bring Nation To Proper Standard

The absence of such a body weakens the government at every point. Not only does it, as has already been stated, make international recognition informal and temporary, but it deprives the government of the advantages of a sound financial system. Under these conditions, the government lacks financial support both from without and from within. It is impossible for such foreign countries and capitalists as act in good faith, to make permanent contracts with a government which is not fully constituted. Contracts which are put through under such circumstances are usually not made with the best interests of the Chinese nation in view. The Chinese people do not recognise their binding character; and while it may be possible to enforce them temporarily through political power, their permanent effect can only be damaging and disastrous to all concerned.

PARLIAMENT NEEDED

It is plain that foreign nations cannot be expected to support a government which does not have the support of its own citizens and which lacks authority over them. Such domestic support can come only through the action of the citizens expressing itself in parliament.

There is another, even more fundamental reason for the necessity of parliament. The only sound basis for authority in a modern state is legality, i.e., continuous application of constitutional arrangements without violent interruptions or intermittent control through personal power. Only when this legality exists can a government enjoy the confidence of its own people and of foreign nations. In the Republic of the United States, legality has been the basis of authority for one hundred and fifty years, and never has the continuous application of law been interrupted. Law has been changed when the will of the majority of the citizens has been changed in accord with the constitutional arrangements. To this rule all willingly submit, and all recognise its fairness and justice. The Republic of China can enjoy power and respect among the nations only if it establishes the same continuous application of law.

At the present time, it must be confessed the legality of constitutional arrangement has been greatly disturbed. The effect of this upon public confidence at home and abroad has been disastrous. It is therefore necessary that everything should be done to restore confidence in the government as a government of law and not of men, intrigue, corruption and military force.

PRACTICAL SOLUTION

As we examine the details of the situation and ask, how this most urgent need of the Chinese nation can be fulfilled in accordance with the principle of legality, no solution seems perfectly satisfactory.

The provisional constitution of 1912, under which, after a fashion, the government is still operating, was intended to be temporary and to give way to a permanent fundamental law. The elaboration of the latter through parliament has for many reasons not come about. The parliamentary situation has been complicated by the election of a new extra-legal parliament and by the migration and division into many factions of the older body. To discuss this question on the basis of the legal rights of the old parliament has led only to further division.

The fundamental basis of all legality is public consent expressed in an orderly manner. In a situation such as the present, it is therefore not only proper but it seems necessary to revert to a popular verdict for solution. In arriving at such a decision the already existing groupings and organisations of the people should be made the basis of action. If this is not done, it would be easy to form new 'mushroom' organisations in order to influence the decision. In the existing commercial, industrial and educational organisations of the Chinese people, and in the provincial assemblies, there can be found the only true source of national authority; from them the national government may be endowed with that representative authority which at the present time it lacks.

UNDESIRABLE ELEMENTS

In the election of a great constitutional convention such has been proposed—any departure from the above principle would tend to encourage unrepresentative and undesirable elements. The people of China have created these active and living organisations of commerce, industry and education. These organisations can be trusted to select truly representative men who will speak with authority for those who have selected them, and who will not be mere office-seekers who gain position at the hands of an indifferent or purchasable general electorate. The people of China are at the present time sufficiently aroused to the importance of public action; they know that their national right can be protected and developed only by men who are actually representative of and in touch with the industrial, agricultural and educational life of the community.

Therefore a body proceeding from this method of selection will enjoy great authority. At the same time its temper will be practical, and it may be confidently expected that it will not desire to usurp functions which can more fitly be performed by the official organisation—of the government. In this way there will be secured an assembly of men who will be able to speak with authority for the people of China. It will be their sole function to draw up a fundamental law legally establishing the government in all its branches and a parliamentary election law.

When this has been done, the Chinese Government will commence to function normally and will be able to maintain the sovereignty and independence of the Chinese Republic. The People's Constitutional Convention, in order to be able to perform its work effectively, should not be a large body.

QUALITY NOT QUALITY

Its importance should be constituted by quality rather than by numbers, and it is not desirable that the provinces should have more than between six and ten representatives each. The election of this highly important body of the people by all the existing popular organisations in China, will in itself be a national action of the greatest moment which is sure to enlist the interest of the entire people and make them aware of the vital importance of the national government to their welfare every day and through the year.

It is necessary again to emphasise that it would be fatal to leave open the door for the creation of organisations specially designed to influence the election. The people should act through organisations already existing which already enjoy authority and representative character. Otherwise but little authority could be bestowed upon the national assembly. Authority cannot be created out of nothing.

It can, however, be handed on by those already possessing it. Under the permanent constitution, a parliament should then immediately be elected; also by a method in which the existing organisations of the people are taken as a basis.

Such a parliament, we may confidently expect, will have gained sufficient wisdom through the trials through which China has passed, to devote itself singleheartedly to its work of acting purely as a legislative body, allowing the government to initiate policies and to carry them through after approval by the parliament, not attempting itself to usurp the administrative functions nor wasting its energy in futile personal attacks.

MUST HEAR PUBLIC

Should the government at this time fail to respond to the popular demand for representative institutions, it would also fair to secure tions, it would also be fair to secure public, confidence although it might honestly devote itself to a policy of reconstruction.

The test will be, whether the government desires the representatives of the people to participate in the government and to be informed concerning public action. Should the government decline to do this, it will have neither domestic nor foreign support except such as is given at a ruinous cost to the Chinese nation. A continuance of the present situation would therefore inevitably lead to the downfall of the Chinese Government.

The statesmen who will identify themselves with public demand for representative institutions will save their country, and will be entitled to the everlasting thanks of their nation. Those who oppose it will be written down in the book of infamy as men whose personal ambition, unworthiness and desire for selfish gain caused them to destroy their own nation.

CONSTITUTION

There has been altogether too much theoretical discussion of the constitution. It is in the interests of China that it should be the simplest possible document. If it guarantees the presence, at all times, of a representative body whose consent to important acts of the government is necessary, the growing experience of the various organs of government will be the best guide as to the practice in detail. It would be a mistake, on the basis of theory or of the practice of entirely different nations, to lay down a hard and fast rule for China.

To attempt the establishment of a highly centralised government in China would be a mistake. The provinces are the bodies which, through experience and tradition as well as on account of their great size, are most competent to carry on the every-day functions of government. It is therefore desirable that the Chinese Government should be federal in form leaving considerable autonomy to the provinces and allowing each to adopt its system of administration to local needs and traditions. The central government would represent the entire nation in matters in which national unity of action is essential, such as foreign relations, defense, postal service, coinage, and similar matters.

Among the tasks which the Central Government has already undertaken, there are two of such great importance that the government may well concentrate its attention primarily thereon, leaving the province to do the bulk of the work in all other matters. I refer to Communications and Justice.

IMPORTANCE OF RAILWAYS

Indeed, there is nothing through which the welfare of the entire Chinese people can be more immediately and unquestionably promoted than through the construction of the great trunk railways and the creation of a road system suitable for automobiles. The financial support of the foreign nations should be primarily utilised to give China, during the next ten years, the 20,000 additional miles of railway and 20,000 miles of roads which, by themselves alone, would increase the national wealth of China easily three-fold of their present valuation.

The provision of adequate port facilities for the international trade of China, which is bound to assume hitherto unthought-of proportions in the near future, is also most essential.

In carrying out these indispensable public works, the government will be able to act with effect only if a national parliament exists which can give legal character to all the arrangements made; otherwise it will be impossible to secure adequate financial support for such undertakings.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM NEEDED

From the national point of view, the rapid organisation of China's judical system is of the utmost importance. The organisation of adequate and complete legal remedies for infringements of individual rights, and the recognition of the right of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness in the individual—can only be accomplished by concerted action and deference to the will of a legal parliament with complete authority. Until the establishment of such authority, and its due recognition, China can not rise to the position of one of the independent nations of earth—nor will the question of the abolition of extraterritoriality be given serious consideration during the period before such authority reigns supreme.

If the Central Government of China can give to the people only adequate means of communication and a system of just settlement of controversies; if it could abstain from interfering with the enterprise of individuals; it will so justify its existence that the people will be ready to give it adequate support. Railways, roads and legal protection are simple but welcome blessings which the Government should bestow.

FACTS HAVE BEEN LACKING

In the past, reliable facts as to the economic life of China and the financial administration of the government have not been accessible. One of the most useful functions of the Central Government would be fulfilled through the establishment of an organ for the dissemination of accurate economic and financial information. The sooner this is done the better will it be for the credit and the general advancement of China. This matter is specially spoken of because, unless it is seriously undertaken and carried through with scientific thoroughness, Chinese credit cannot be soundly established in the world. It is a function which transcends the sphere of any provincial government.

The progress of education is indeed also of the utmost importance, but it may be advisable to continue the present policy of allowing this matter to be handled primarily by the provinces, with the Central Government assisting through the establishment of universities and the laying down of general educational policies in cooperation with the provincial authorities.

CONCLUSION

The Government of China at this moment has an opportunity of establishing itself soundly in the confidence of the Chinese people and of friendly nations by immediately reconstituting the representative character of the national government. The commercial and industrial classes of the people, under the leadership of men of modern education, have begun to take a vital interest in public affairs. On this interest, and the unity of national action which it makes possible, the future welfare and strength of China depends. These forces cannot be satisfied with promises and programs. They can be convinced only by action.

As long as the government should neglect to admit the representatives of the nation to participation in power—as long as the government should ignore the principle of legality and popular consent which are fundamental in the modern state, it cannot count on the support of this national public opinion.

Should the government attempt through parley and negotiation to satisfy every faction, the present disastrous condition would be continued. If, however, the government can take the lead, and of its own motion take a course of action which the sense of justice of the nation must approve, and which has already been suggested by a leader in whom the people of China have implicit confidence because of his proven honesty and solicitude for the public welfare—then only will the nation—ignoring political controversies—be reunited. If the government will decline to do this, the great national movement will ultimately accomplish the same thing. No force can stop the development of popular government in the present age.

Ignorance, corruption and selfishness may at times obstruct and allay this movement. If such opposition is strong enough it may continue to inflict great suffering upon the people and lead even to the temporary loss of national independence. Wise statesmanship will strive to avoid such disaster and will ally itself with the healthy and progressive force of national life, which alone can give strength and dignity to the government.

MANY GREAT LESSONS

The recent history of China has been a series of trials and of great lessons teaching the futility of all personal ambition and narrow politics intrigue. President Yuan Shih-k'ai, with all of his personal ability and strength, was unable to realise his ambition to force Chinese development back into dynastic currents. Chang Hsun in vain attempted to resurrect the dynastic tradition of the old regime. Notwithstanding the conservatism of the Chinese race, the nation did not desire such a return to an outlived system.

More recently the attempt has been made to found a political power on military organisation and foreign financial support. Before intense popular disapproval an organisation which seemed formidable crumbled in a week. All these attempts have been unsuccessful.

Through all these trials and with much discouragement the growing consciousness of the Chinese people has victoriously asserted itself. That has been superior to the cunning of politics and the force of military organisation. An attempt to oppose this force is like trying to stem the tide of the Yangtsze River with an artificial dam; the majestic flow may be held up for a little while at the cost of flood and misery to the surrounding country; but the final course of the stream cannot be obstructed. Even so the course now definitely taken by the Chinese people towards representative institutions may indeed be obstructed, and that at the cost of much misery and discouragement; but its constantly more effective realisation is now apparent. Wise statesmen will ally themselves with this great force and will then stand firmly planted with a legitimate influence with which no personal power won by intrigue or self-assertion can be at all compared. The lesson of the recent experience is plain. It would be blindness to ignore it.

merchant to wrap them in parcels and come with him to his home.

Woo Sing-faung was not seen again by his shop assistants until hours later after they had learned that he was shot and probably dying in the hospital.

LURED INTO YARD

The white man and the Chinese dealer left the curio shop in rickshas, the Chinese carrying the parcels of jewels. Investigation by the police revealed that they had reached a place in the neighborhood of No. 1800 Great Western Road before the rickshas were dismissed. This residence is the home of Mr. T. Webster and the stranger told Woo Sing-faung that it was his home. He invited the Chinese dealer to enter, at the same time opening the gate for him. This incident was witnessed from the street.

As the Chinese moved into the area-way leading to the dwelling the man with him drew a revolver and, firing at short range, shot him through the head. The report was heard by servants in the house who rushed out in time to see the white man disappearing toward the street while the Chinese lay on the cement desperately wounded. The nearest Chinese police officer was called and on his report to Bubbling Well Station the wounded man was removed to the Red Cross Hospital.

The bullet, it was found, had entered the man's head just behind the left ear and had gone all the way through the head coming out near the right eye. How seriously the brain may be affected could not be determined, but as the victim retained consciousness through the day yesterday more or less, it was thought last night that he may have a fighting chance.

The inquiry of the police late yesterday led the chase for the fugitive into Hongkew and in the course of the evening several persons were summoned to the Hongkew station to answer questions of the detectives working directly under Acting Chief of Detectives Burnside. No arrests were made through the evening, however.

Chicago Doctor Had Endless Rum Chain

Issued 7,435 Whiskey Prescriptions In 46 Days He Admits .

Chicago, July 17.—Dr. J. W. Russell of Chicago admitted today to Capt. Hubert Howard, district prohibition officer, that he had issued 7,435 whiskey prescriptions between February 11 and March 24, an average of 175 a day for forty-six days.

"They came in an endless chain," the doctor testified, "and did not give me a chance either to eat or sleep."

When asked what he charged he replied that he got from 50 cents to $2 a prescription and that twice he had it call the police to disperse the mob that gathered about his office. A sign was posted in his waiting room stating that prescriptions issued after March 24 would be only on Government blanks and that the charges would be from $2 up.

When asked concerning his methods of issuing the blanks he said that he would look over a man, ask him if he was ill and if the man answered affirmatively he would get the prescription.

Dr. Russell has lost his license and his patients must seek other means of cure.

FIGHTS AMERICAN IMPORTS

German Adding Machine Makers Ask Tightening Of Embargo

Berlin, July 2.—German manufacturers of adding machines are appealing to the Government for assistance in their fight to prevent the importation of American made machines which they claim now are superfluous, as the German industry is capable of supplying the home demand. Action has been caused by the application of a well-known American firm through its Berlin branch for permission to import 1,700 adding machines to meet the German demand until the American firm has completed its local branch factory.

The German manufacturers have addressed a joint appeal to the Ministry of Economics demanding further inforcement of the existing import embargo and requesting that wholesale importation should be prohibited. Vorwaerts declares that while the German working man does not desire to be placed under the domination of American capital, the present action by the German makers is undignified and not in keeping with German efficiency which has always been able to assert itself in the competitive markets even when pitted against American enterprise.

WANT AMERICA TO TAKE PART IN WORLD AFFAIRS

Lloyd George Says U. S. Cannot Refrain From Participating

SATISFIED WITH SPA

Declares Conference Went Better Than He Or Other Leaders Expected

BY RAYMOND SWING

Spa, Belgium, July 17.—The world is smaller today than it was in the time of George Washington, and America cannot refrain from participating in world affairs, Premier Lloyd George told British and American newspapermen, who were his guests at a dinner last night. He said that after the American people make their decision in the elections this year he hopes America will again take part in European affairs.

The Premier voiced satisfaction over the outcome of the Spa conference which, he said, had gone better than he or any other of the allied leaders had hoped. His reference to America was evoked by a question as to whether the United States would be represented at Geneva. He said he would be delighted if it were true, and declared that it was helpful to have in European councils a country free from European traditions.

When some one asked if it might not be embarrassing to have America making demands the Premier replied that it was just that sort of embarrassment which was needed. He said it was a great pity and a great misfortune, and he sometimes wondered if it were not a great disaster, that America had not been in the peace discussion all along.

Spa, Belgium, July 17.—At the moment of signing the protocols the Germans refused to sign that relating to the prohibition of the manufacture of airships by Germany. Under the treaty the German aeronautic materia' should have been handed over by April 10 and further manufacture was prohibited during the next six months while the international commission divided or destroyed the surrendered material.

As the stipulations of the treaty were not complied with, the Allies notified Germany from the Boulogne conference that manufacture was forbidden during the three months following complete delivery. The allied decision was made the subject of a protocol at Spa, to which however the Germans refused to affix their signature after the allied representatives had signed.

M. Millerand says that the matter will be regulated directly with Berlin through diplomatic representations.

GERMANS IMPRESSED ALLIES

"We will do our best to carry out the agreements entered into here," Dr. Walter Simons, the German Foreign Minister, said.

Dr. Simons declared he was apprehensive of disturbances in the Ruhr mining region.

"Trouble is likely to come next week," said he, "unless we can take measures to feed the miners better at the same time that we ask them to work harder. I know the mentality of our miners. It is not enough to say 'Work harder this week and you will be better fed next week.'

"They want their good food now. Then they will work. For the first time during the conference I did not sleep last night. I telegraphed Hermes, our Food Minister, to send all available foodstuffs to the Ruhr immediately. I have written to the food ministers of France, Belgium, Great Britain and Italy, urging them to do all that is possible to get more food into the Ruhr within two weeks."

WANTS POLICE REFORM

Dr. Simons at a later moment said: "The German Government wants a form of general police, something like the Canadian Northwest Mounted Guards or Irish Constabulary, to replace all other sorts of police in Germany. It is nonsense, in my judgment for us to have a blue and green vounteer security police force. We hope the Allies will help us in forming the right kind of a constabulary."

Allied Governments will take appropriate measures to assist Germany in floating loans intended to meet her internal requirements and to assist her in the prompt discharge of her debt to the Allies, according to the agreement signed here today by representatives of Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan, Belgium and Portugal, settling problems relative to reparations. The distribution of indemnities received from Austria-Hungary and Bulgaria was also provided for in the agreement.

Belgium is given priority in the payment of 2,500,000,000 gold francs, and the agreement enumerates the securities for such priority. The Allies also arranged for a method of valuing the ships surrendered by Germany and her allies under the various treaties, as well as the allocation of these vessels. Surrendered war ships, docks and other war materials were also dealt with by the Entente nations' delegates.

One of the articles of the agreement fixing the cost of the occupation armies on a uniform basis was not concluded, it being desired to discuss the matter with the United States before final adjustment of the problem.

International Commission To Deal With Emigration

(Reuter's Service)

Geneva, August 29.—In conformity with the resolution adopted by the International Labor Conference at Washington in 1919, an International Commission of Emigration has been constituted, composed one-third of Government delegates, one-third of Workers' Delegate and one-third of Employers' Delegates.

Brazil, Canada, China, France, Japan and India have nominated Government representatives.

Australia, Germany, the United States, Poland, Italy and Sweden have nominated workers delegates.

South Africa, the Argentine, Spain, Greece, Czecho-Slovakia and Switzerland have nominated employers delegates.

The Presidency of the Commission has been assigned to Viscount Cave (Great Britain).

The International Labor Bureau has addressed a comprehensive questionnaire on the subject of emigration to 42 Governments which are members of the League of Nations. The first task of the Commission will be to collate all reliable information for the benefit of all.

The questionnaire aims principally at obtaining intelligence regarding the present situation in each State on emigration and immigration of workers and the laws in force relating to these matters.

The opinion of each Government is sought on a large number of questions concerning all aspects of the emigration problem, the possibility of harmonising diverse wages and international co-ordination of legislation. The Governments are requested to reply before October 15.

It has been arranged for the Commission to meet in the spring of 1921 at Geneva.

SPORT RECORDS ARE UNSTABLE THINGS AT BEST

Some Day Horse Will Do Mile In Minute And Quarter Is Prediction

FANS SEE SUPERMAN

But They Thought The Same Ten Years Ago, Rains Official Pessimist

BY HENRY L. FARRELL

New York, August 15.—Some day a horse will run a mile in a minute and a quarter.

Some day a diamond star will knock seventy-five home runs per year.

Some day a sprinter will dash 100 yards in nine seconds.

Records have fallen with such consistency this year that fans are acclaiming the day of the superman.

But they thought the same thing ten years ago.

The superlative degree in accomplishments of sport has not been reached. Perhaps it never will be.

When Bob Simpson ran the 120-yard high hurdles in 14 3-5 back in 1916 fandom sat back with the comfortable feeling that here was a record that would stand for all time.

When the mark for 100 yards was set at 9 3-5 it was branded as the maximum of human speed.

When the good horse Sunbriar ran a mile at Saratoga in 1918 in 1:36 1-5 the super-animal of the equine kingdom was heralded.

But practically all the kings of old have been dethroned in a spectacular revolution of sport during the past year.

Earl Thomson, the Canadian star of Dartmouth, made the 120-yd. hurdles in 15 1-5; Charley Paddock, the California flier, was timed twice in 9 2-5 for the century dash and equalled the world's record for the 100 meters over a rough, uphill, improvised track in Brooklyn; and the great Man o'War ran a mile in 1:35 4-5.

NEW WORLD'S MARK

More than that—this wonderful thoroughbred set a new world's mark of 1:49 2-5 for a mile and a furlong and a new mark of 2:14 1-5 for 1⅝ miles.

Last year when the swat king of all times, Babe Ruth, knocked 29 home runs it was acclaimed as a record for all time. Yet the Babe came to that mark in a little over a half season this year.

Last winter, Norman Ross, the greatest swimmer in American history, started a campaign against old established records that resulted in new world's marks for 200, 220, 300, 440 and 500 yards and a half mile indoors.

Then there was Jake Driscoll, the Boston College runner, who made a new mark of 59 1-5 for 500 yards. And the English relay team—Tatham, Stallard, Milligan and Rudd, who ran two miles for a new world's mark of 7:50 2-5. And Etheida Bleibtrey who swam 100 meters in 1:12 3-5.

Tommy Milton also joined the select circle of record breakers by setting a halfdozen new automobile marks on the Daytona beach.

Along the line of accomplished impossibles also was the feat of William T. Tilden, the first American ever to win the world's tennis championship.

MERE TOLERANCE

The old boys who lived in the past generation's day of wonders look upon the new record holders with mere tolerance and while conceding them honors for their accomplishments still say that the athletes of old were the best.

They cite new conditions, new facilities for speed as the reason for the dethronement of their heroes.

We who are living now in the new generation's day of wonder athletes may say the same thing in life's tomorrow when we see our heroes fall by the wayside, their places taken by the school boys of today.

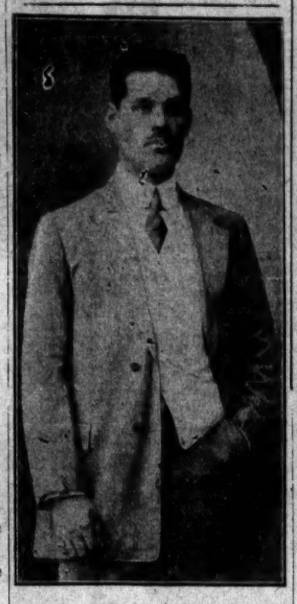
New records are bound to come just because the world gets better every day and things of necessity must advance.

The fan of today may accept the new supermen but there will be those who will always say:

"There never was a horse like Man o' War. The swimmer never lived as good as Norman Ross. Charley Paddock was the greatest of all sprinters. The new champions are preliminary boys compared to Jack Dempsey and Benny Leonard."

It's the same old story.

Japanese Marksman Wins New Laurels



MR. R. J. ITO

Mr. R. J. Ito, Shanghai's crack Japanese rifleman has achieved new laurels through his victory over a big field of the city's best riflemen in the competition for the .303 British Rifle Championship that closed Monday. Mr. Ito topped the list in this competition, having won the first stage, with a score of 313 while the next three places also went to Japanese riflemen.

Preceding this victory Mr. Ito was winner of the grand aggregate in the year's annual rifle meeting of the Shanghai Rifle Association. He is a director in the Kaiyosha Company, a Japanese mercantile firm and has been a resident of Shanghai for the past seven years, having come from Kobe.

He joined the S. V. C. Japanese Company in 1918, having had no experience with firearms previous to that time. After having joined the Shanghai Rifle Association he was placed in 'D' class and when he took nearly all prizes for this class at the spring meeting of 1919 he was immediately raised to 'A' class and from January this year was transferred to the A-1 class, highest of all.

MIXED DOUBLES IN PARK TOURNAMENT NEXT SATURDAY

The mixed doubles are the next event in the finals of the Hongkew Park Lawn Tennis Tournament which has been in progress since July 14. The mixed doubles will be played at the park at 4:30 o'clock next Saturday between Miss Gentina Remedios and Mr. F. Machado against Miss Marie Remedios and Mr. R. Souza.

The other events in the finals of the tournament are as follows:

Men's singles: Saturday, September 11 at 4 o'clock between Mr. A. M. Souza and Mr. P. R. Meyer.

Men's Doubles: Saturday, September 18 at 4 o'clock between Messrs. A. A. Leitao and P. R. Meyer against Messrs. A. M. Souza and S. Collaco.

Jap Net Star To Play In U.S. Tourney

New York, July 14.—Zenzo Shimidzu, the great little Japanese tennis player, who was defeated by William T. Tilden II in the final round of the all-England championship tournament at Wimbledon, England, will come to this country in time to compete in the national singles championship tourney at Forest Hills and perhaps at Longwood and Southampton.

This became known through Seiichiro Kashio, who has been in communication with Shimidzu, a boyhood friend of his. Kashio and Ichiya Kumagae are leaving for Antwerp to compete in the Olympic tournament in August, but Shimidzu will ably fill their places on American courts to judge from his performance abroad last week.

Auction Bridge

BY R. F. FOSTER

(Author of "Foster on Auction," "Auction Made Easy," "Foster's Complete Hoyle," "Russian Bank," etc.)

If it is true that aces and kings are worth twice as much to the partners that get the contract as they are to their opponents, there must be some reason for it. "Cavendish" used to say that nothing could make an ace take two tricks at whist; but it will often be the means of taking three or four at auction.

Take the case of a re-entry ace in the dummy, which is the only card that will bring an established suit. Not only does the ace itself take a trick, it enables the dummy to make several other tricks in another suit which would have been impossible but for that ace.

We have seen that forty-seven aces and kings enabled the declarer and dummy to win forty-six extra tricks with smaller cards, while their opponents did not take any, or, if they did, they lost some of their high ones, because their total of twenty-four tricks took twenty-five aces and kings to secure.

This looks as if we might say that if we can get the contract all our aces and kings are worth two tricks apiece, and that if we don't get it they will be worth one trick apiece at the most. This is about the truth, but it is too rough and ready a system of valuation for practical purposes, although it seems to confirm the opinion, so often expressed, that one should never bid except on aces and kings.

While forty-seven aces and kings may enable the declarer to win ninety-three tricks in nine deals, it does not follow that kings are just as valuable as aces. We have lumped them together for the sake of brevity in illustration. We must now proceed to separate them.

An ace ought to take a trick, no matter who leads the suit, but kings are sometimes led through and lost. The only case in which a king is just as good as an ace is when it is in the same suit as the ace, because one is as good as the other, so far as taking the trick is concerned.

Suppose we say that an ace is worth two tricks; then the ace and king of a suit should be worth four, because they appear to be able to produce four tricks in actual play. If the king is without the ace, and may be lost about half the time, it must be worth only half as much as an ace, or one trick, the ace being worth two.

Now let us get down to the application of those values to the actual bidding, and see how they work out, because no theory is of any use unless the facts support it. You have what you call four tricks in hand, but you cannot bid to win four; you must undertake to win seven. You have a partner, and if he has his share of the remaining nine, those three, added to your four, make the seven that you have to bid. Now take a hand, and let us see how this works out.

H.—Q 3
C.—A K 3
D.—J 10 7 6 4
S.—Q 8 6

H. A 10 9 7 4	Y	H.—J 6 2
C.—J 10 4 2	A B	C.—9 8
D.—K 5	Z	D.—Q 8 2
S.—J 10		S. K 9 5 4 2

H.—K 8 5
C.—Q 7 6 5
D.—A 9 3
S.—A 7 3

Counting his aces as worth two apiece, and his king as worth one, Z's cards are worth five tricks. With five out of thirteen to be played for, and a partner, he bids one no-trump and gets the contract.

A leads a small heart and dummy goes down. The only count in that hand seems to be the four we have agreed to be the value of an ace-king suit. Add these four to the declarer's five and we get nine. Nine tricks at no-trump is game, if we can make it. That it can be made by correct play is obvious, and nothing can stop it. But it must be correct play, because one cannot bid on nine tricks and then chuck two or three of them.

Dummy wins the heart trick with the queen and starts our friend, the ace-jack-ten finesse in diamonds. A wins with the king and tries to get his partner in to come through Z's guarded king of hearts by leading a spade. The queen, king and ace fall. Dummy gets in with a club and Z finesses the nine of diamonds, catches the queen, and puts dummy in with another club to make two more diamonds, after which the queen of clubs wins the game. The hands seem to have been correctly valued.

Cochran Increases His Offer To Dempsey For Bout

English Promoter Agrees To Give Champion £50,000 For Fight With Carpentier

New York, July 26.—Charles B. Cochran, English theatrical and boxing promoter, who made a trip to this country a short time ago for the purpose of signing Jack Dempsey for a championship bout with Georges Carpentier, but without success, has launched another drive to get the big match. Cochran now announces his willingness to give Dempsey close to $200,000 for his end if he will agree to meet the European heavyweight champion in London in November or December.

Cochran's latest proposal was announced last night by William A. Brady, the American representative of the English promoter, in the following announcement:

"I am authorised by Charles B. Cochran of London to offer Jack Dempsey £50,000 to sign an agreement to meet Georges Carpentier for the heavyweight championship of the world in November or December next in London. Mr. Cochran is prepared to deposit the sum of £20,000 in the hands of any responsible person in New York City as a guarantee of his good faith. Being in possession of Carpentier's signature to a contract to meet Dempsey there remains no reason why the details for a championship match should not be arranged at once."

(Signed) William A. Brady.

Efforts to reach Jack Kearns manager of Dempsey, were unavailing last night. It was said by a representative of Mr. Brady that Kearns had been in consultation recently with the American representative of Mr. Cochran but not since this latest offer was received.

Unless Kearns recedes from the stand he took recently the offer will not be accepted. Dempsey's manager announced shortly after the champion was cleared of the charge of dodging the draft that under no conditions would he go to Europe for the purpose of meeting the challenger. The bout would take place in the United States or not at all, according to the positive declaration of Kearns.

This latest move by Cochran is regarded as a final move to protect himself on the contract which Carpentier signed several months ago. That stipulated that Cochran would control the services of the French heavyweight until Jan. 1, 1921, so it devolves upon the English promoter to get Dempsey's signature for a bout before that time or lose the money which he invested in the probability of getting the two heavyweights together in a championship bout. Carpentier has made it clear that he can make no move until after Jan. 1 next except through the consent of Cochran.

Leases A Rink As Place To Train

New York, July 26.—Jack Kearns has found a training spot for Jack Dempsey. Kearns has leased an old winter skating plot at the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Eighth avenue and, training in the very heart of the city, the innocents will get an opportunity to see the champion in action. Of course, folks are not going to see Jack train for nothing. Oh, no.

Dempsey has only to repeat his performances at Toledo, however, for the spectators to get value received. Dempsey is a tremendous worker and if he can get enough big fellows to stand the shock of his great right hand, things are bound to happen.

Banked seats will be erected on this lot, the ring being placed in the center. It is certain that Dempsey is going to have plenty to do around these parts and with that much in mind, Kearns got busy, from the exhibition standpoint.

They hauled in thousands of dollars at Toledo while Jack was training for Willard. Prices during work days were fifty cents. On Saturdays and holidays it cost the meek and lowly one buck to see the champion-to-be at his toiling.

Whether he is matched or out folks will want to see Dempsey at work, hence the lease and dreams of dandy daily gates.

"ABOUT FIFTY-FIFTY"

By Tad

"A friend of mine," said Larry Walsh, "had some fine rabbit sausage in a Chicago hotel. He liked it so well that he asked the head waiter where the sausage was made. He was told in Oshkosh, Wis. My friend happened to be in Oshkosh approaching the factory, he saw a man leading a decrepit horse toward the gate. Afterward, in speaking to the manager of the place, my friend asked him if they used any horse meat in their rabbit sausage.

"Oh, yes," said the manager.

"In about what proportion?" he was asked.

"About fifty-fifty," the manager replied, "One horse to one rabbit."

MIXED DOUBLES FINALS

Finals in the mixed doubles of the tennis tournament at Bubbling Well Police Station were played on Sunday and were won by Mrs. Wheeler and Sergt. Mitchell against Mrs. Storms and Sergt. Ockwell, 7-5, 7-5, 6-3. The game was umpired by Sergeant Foley and at its conclusion tea was provided by the sergeants and constables of Bubbling Well Station and served to a large crowd by Mesdames Foley, Mills and Ockwell. The prizes, two silver cups, first pair, and gold tie pin and gold brooch in the shape of a tennis racket were presented by Mrs. Mills.

Gives Museum Skeleton Of Famed Racer

Sydney, Australia, July 17.—The Duke of Portland has presented the skeleton of the famous race horse Carbine, which, among his numerous successes, won the Melbourne cup, to the public library museums and national gallery of Victoria. The skeleton has duly arrived in Melbourne.

Carbine, which won nearly $150,000 in stakes, securing thirty-three of the forty-three races in which he started, besides being second in six and third in three others, was purchased by the Duke of Portland and brought to England in 1895, the idea being that his stout Musket blood would be an immense asset to the British stud. He sired Spearmint and Rowlng Piece Hamrod and other good stock, but perhaps his success as a sire in England scarcely realised anticipations. He died at the Welbeck stud shortly before the outbreak of the war in 1914.

Lightning Strikes And Kills Ball Player

Celina, Ohio, July 26.—Ed. Wourms, 26, outfielder of the Goldwater baseball team, was struck by lightning and instantly killed while in the act of fielding a ball during a game here. The bolt struck him in the left temple, split open his head and badly burned his body.

CARDINAL AMETTE

(Reuter's Service)

Paris, August 29.—The death is announced of Cardinal Amette, Archbishop of Paris.

SURVIVAL of the fittest, is the ancient law throughout the world. And nothing succeeds like success. No doubt you are anxious to be successful in your export business, especially in your Musk business—an article in which all the human senses are brought into play when testing, therefore can you afford to buy any kind of Musk? Because others have been buying adulterated Musk for years, there is no reason why you should. Send $300 through the Chinese Post Office to MR. ELLY WIDLER, TA TSINGLU, SZECHUEN PROVINCE and he will mail you a sample of one pound of WIDLER'S MUSK, the Musk you will eventually buy. Forget all the other trade names by which Musk is known. Tel. Too Nervous To Fly To Holland

That Is Mary Pickford's Explanation Of Voyaging From England By Steamship

The Hague, July 1.—Mary Pickford and her bridegroom, Douglas Fairbanks, have arrived here from London, crossing the North Sea in a steamship like ordinary travellers. When reminded that it had been announced that they come by airplane she said she was too tired and nervous to make the trip that way.

Her program includes a motor tour to see the quaint Dutch towns and brief visits to Scandinavia, Germany and France, sailing for New York August 21.

Some English newspapers received by mail did not catch the enthusiasm over the "movie star honeymooners" that seized others.

For instance, the Manchester Guardian ironically remarks:

"It is certainly hard lines on Miss Mary Pickford and Mr. Douglas Fairbanks, who have come to spend a quiet honeymoon in London, away from the turmoil and publicity of Los Angeles. Choosing a spot where no one had expected to see them, they settled in a quiet hostelry in Piccadilly known as the Ritz Hotel. There, hidden on the balcony, they were perceived by the crowd, and although Mr. Fairbanks, to escape observation, straddled the balustrade and hung over the street people still observed him. It must have been very disconcerting to the American celebrities."

"Observant," in the London Observer, quoting the foregoing, thinks "that is all that need be said on the cinema subject, unless, perhaps, that the cinema industry is expert at producing crowds to order."

Then the writer notes that in reporting the arrival of the stars the Daily Chronicle gave two columns and a half of space, the Daily Mail two columns, and so on down the diminishing list until nothing was found in the Daily Telegraph.

HIGH TAXES ENRAGE FRENCH

Paris, July 22.—The Paris middle class—usually the most uncomplaining majority in the world—is beginning to show signs of great wrath with the French Government's domestic and foreign policies.

With great fortitude they prepared themselves to submit, "pour la patrie," to the unprecedented taxes with which under the June budget they are to be burdened, but when they found out that only 1,600,000,000 francs out of 4,000,000,000 voted for the purpose had actually been devoted to the devastated regions with not an explanation as to where the other three billions and odd millions went to they began to kick.

Protest meetings are being held throughout France. Almost every Frenchman paid directly or indirectly to the fund for the devastated regions, many to an extent unjustified by their personal riches, and they are insistent that they be told who got the money they destined for rebuilding stricken northern France.

The affair may yet prove the rock on which the Millerand government will go to smash if the "accord" reached at Spa does not break it sooner.

Added to this the middle classes find numerous other grounds for complaint, and, hitherto silent, they are beginning to find their voice.

One of the new taxes, for instance, imposes a tax of 50 percent on music in restaurants. Prior to the first of July, when this tax went into effect, almost every resturant, even the very smallest, had its orchestra. But on July 1 tourists who journeyed to the heights of Montmarte expecting the usual riotous gayety there were astonished to find every cabaret without its customary orchestra.

"We refuse to add 70 percent to our patrons' bills in order to pay this tax, so we have abolished music," said the proprietors.

Three thousand musicians, thrown out of work by this "tax strike," are clamoring for a revision of the budget.

Meanwhile, for the first time since the first revolution, the ugly American word "graft" is beginning to appear even in the most conservative French newspapers.

Honorary Degrees Given Foreigners By University

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Peking, August 31.—An interesting historical event took place this morning at the Government University when the honorary degree of Doctor of Science was conferred on M. Painleve and M. Joubin, the Director of Lyons University. Tsai Yuan-pei, Chancellor of the Peking University, presided over a distinguished gathering, which included Fan Yuan-lin, the new Minister of Education.

The Chancellor, Tsai Yuan-pei, in the course of his opening address, stated that the University had recently decided to confer the above degree on M. Painleve, M. Joubin, Dr. Reinsch and Dr. Dewey but that, as the two Americans were absent from Peking, another ceremony was being arranged on their behalf.

The Senior Chinese professor, in the course of a lengthy review of M. Painleve's brilliant record, referred to his success in establishing a Chinese section of the University of Paris and also to the fact that shortly after the establishment of the Republic in 1912, M. Painleve had made a speech in the Chamber of Deputies advocating the recognition of the Chinese Republic. The speaker also paid a glowing tribute to M. Joubin, who, he said, had advocated the teaching of French sciences in Chinese Universities.

M. Painleve, replying, said that he was confident that the Chinese understood his expectations with regard to themselves and thanked the University cordially for the honor, conferred on M. Joubin and himself. He said that he would take back the degree to France, not looking upon it merely as a personal honor but also as a spiritual tie, uniting him and China, a tie that he would not forget or disregard in the future.

The Presidential band played the French and Chinese National Anthems and the proceedings terminated.

It is pointed out that this is the first time that a Chinese University has conferred an honorary degree upon a foreigner.

CANADIAN PULP GOES TO SPAIN

Quebec, Que., August 28.—A new market for Canadian pulp was developed here by the visit recently of August Ramoneda of Spain. Ramoneda represents 25 of Spain. largest paper mills and had instructions to place orders for as much Canadian pulp as was available. He secured, however, he stated only one-tenth of the amount he would like to have purchased.

The Canadian Government steamship Maple Court has just sailed for Spain with the first cargo of Canadian pulp for Mr. Ramoneda's clients, who consume about 65,000 tons of pulp per year.

Ramoneda will leave shortly for his home in Barcelona and while there he will endeavor to interest Spanish merchants in shipping their products such as oils, nuts and fruits to Canada.

President To Use Pen As Campaign Weapon

Wilson Will Remain At White House And Give Party All Possible Aid

Washington, July 7.—President Wilson's part in the forthcoming Presidential campaign will be passive only in the physical sense and passive only because the illness from which he is recuperating precludes the possibility of active physical participation.

But in the physically passive support the President will render Gov. Cox and Franklin D. Roosevelt and the Democratic Party there will be intellectual vitality of the sort that caused leaders of the Allies to declare "President Wilson's notes did more to break the Germans than the force of the Allied armies."

Whatever aid the Chief Executive renders will come direct from the White House, as Secretary Tumulty officially announced today that Mr. Wilson would remain in the capital throughout the summer, thus setting at rest rumors that he is preparing to establish a summer White House.

In making this announcement Secretary Tumulty also, as spokesman for the President, informally launched the campaign that will be conducted by the Chief Executive in aid of the party. This was a statement that the President is "slated" over the nomination of Gov. Cox and Mr. Roosevelt and that he expects every element of the party to join in carrying the nominees to victory in November.

The President and Mrs. Wilson went for an automobile ride about Washington today.

Hongkong Market

Messrs. Mexon and Taylor write as follows in their report dated August 27:

A dull week has again to be recorded, and although money is plentiful the uncertainties of exchange continue to act as a deterrent on the employment of funds in the stock market. Short loan interest is lower but despite this the volume of business continues very small.

As indicated last week conditions have improved in London and the market there is better than for some time past.

The chief features of the market are:

Hongkong Banks:—Have buyers at $610 probably a little better would be paid.

Docks:—Have come to business at $148 at which they close with buyers.

Wharves:—Have been done at $85 and $85½.

Unions:—Notwithstanding higher exchange are firmer and $178 is offered for cash.

Hongkong Fires:—Are in small demand at $318 probably slightly higher rates would be paid.

Shells:—Have advanced to 148/-ex rights and dividend.

Central Estates:—At $103 and Hongkong Lands at $111 are firmer and could probably be placed at these rates.

Humphreys:—Have come to business at $7.85.

Cements:—Have advanced to $7.70 for cash with $8 done during the week for September.

Exchange.—The demand selling rate on London is 4|3¾ and the T. T. selling rate on Shanghai is 70½.

Hankow Market

Hankow, August 25, 1920.

FINANCE AND MONEY MARKET

A few Bills were offering early in the week and on the 23rd inst. Bills came out fairly freely, but the supply fell off again on the 24th and 25th and the market closed with very little doing. There was a small enquiry for remittance for freight. Taels T.T. on Shanghai:—Chinese market 96.775 while Foreign Banks quoted 96.8 with very little or no demand. Dollars:—remained steady at 70-70.2 buyers and sellers. Interest:—5 percent. Changsha Exchange:—Nominal.

IMPORTS

There is no business in Piece Goods or Yarn. Prices of local Japanese Yarn have sagged steadily during the past week, for no apparent reason. Clearances of Grey shirtings and Blacks fair.

EXPORTS

The Seed market has attracted some attention, Home markets being much stronger, thus rendering a small business possible. Exchange is however again fluctuating violently, making negotiations very difficult.

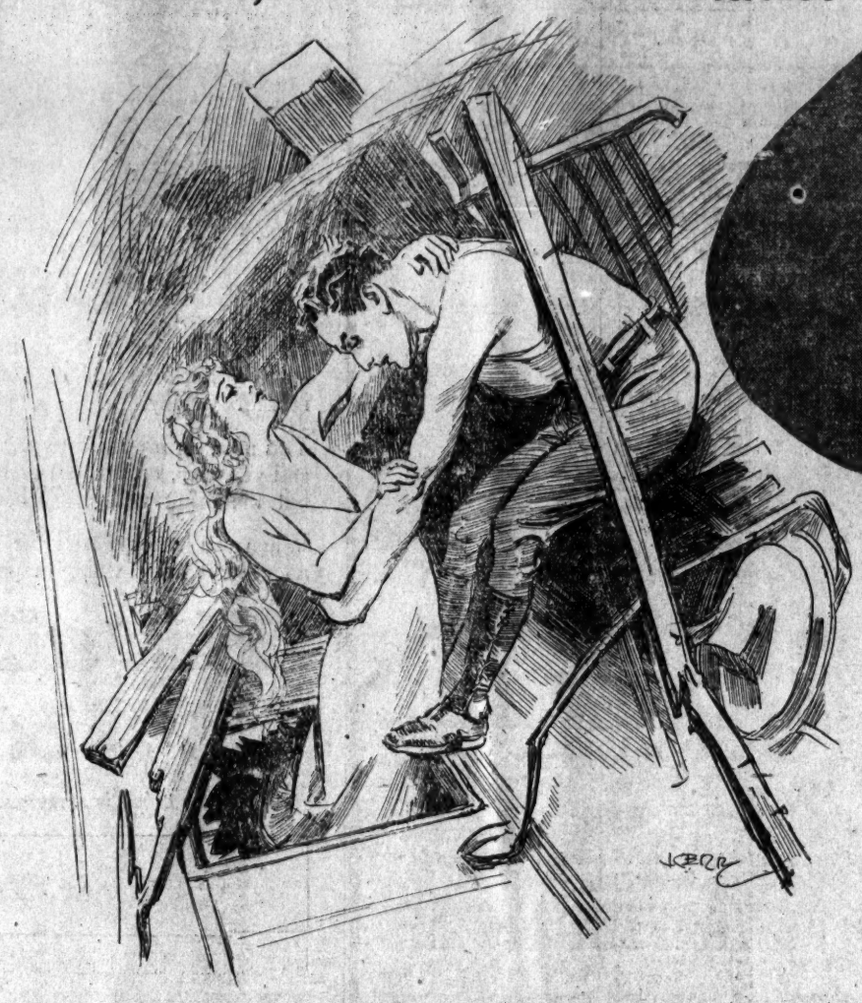
Sgt. Walters of Pershing's Staff and His "Friday the 13th" Romance

The Fateful Journey, the Train Wreck in Which He Saved His Sweetheart's Life, the Countless Obstacles War Threw in the Lovers' Way--- and Yet the Five-Year Fight Between "Mr. Jinx" and "King Cupid" Ended at Last in Love's Triumph



"Out of the wreck he lifted the very girl he had sought vainly to meet—the girl who was destined to be his sweetheart and his bride!"

Mrs. Frederick Walters, the Heroine of the "Jinx" Journey Whose Life the Gallant Sergeant Saved.

SERGEANT FREDERICK WALTERS, U. S. A., of General Pershing's staff during the war in Europe, youthful veteran of the Philippines, Hawaii and Mexico as well, has succeeded at last in marrying Miss Florence Kelley, very pretty, quite accomplished, and one of those girls who did their bit for Uncle Sam as Yeomanettes.

Behind this apparently unexciting statement surges a perfect sea of romance, hopes and heartaches. Day after day for nearly five years, the hoodoo of Friday the-thirteenth—the day the sergeant's brown eyes and Miss Kelley's blue ones first met—has dogged this pair of lovers, relentlessly pursuing them wherever they went and doing its level worst to keep them from each other's arms.

Certainly there never was a more hateful, more persistent jinx than this. It stopped at nothing in its efforts to ruin this romance, throwing all sorts of obstacles in the way of the lovers meeting and even threatening them with death by wrecking a railroad train in which they were riding. Six times the wedding day was set, but on each occasion in stepped Mr. Jinx to prevent.

But Cupid had evidently marked these lovers for his very own, and he was not to be cheated of his prize, even by a hoodoo as relentless as this one proved to be. It was a desperate struggle, but in the end the little god of love came out victor.

It was a few minutes before midnight of Friday, August 13, 1915, and the Southern Limited was just about to pull out of the Jersey City station. Down the platform came striding Sergeant Walters, a sturdy, good-looking young man, on his way to rejoin the Sixth Field Artillery at Douglas, Arizona.

As he passed a bevy of laughing girls and their escorts he heard the words: "Friday, the thirteenth." For the first time it occurred to him that he was beginning his journey on what is considered the unluckiest of days. But five years in the army is not the sort of training to make a man superstitious, and the sergeant saw no cause for worry.

What he did see that set his heart to fluttering as it had never fluttered before was a striking figure which stood out from the little group of people he was passing and held his gaze fascinated. It was the figure of a girl—a slender, graceful, vivacious girl, black haired, blue eyed.

"Lordy!" said Sergeant Walters, with a sigh singularly out of harmony with his stern military appearance. "Lordy, why couldn't I have seen that girl three months ago, when my furlough was just beginning? Friday-the-thirteenth a hoodoo? I'll say it is!"

When he reached the steps of his car he turned his head and searched the length of the platform with longing eyes. But the vision of loveliness who had won his heart in one glance was no longer to be seen. He did not know whether she had boarded the train or left the station. Probably the latter, he thought gloomily.

The memory of what he had seen for just an instant, however, was something that would live forever. All night long those delightful blue eyes laughed through his dreams, and when he awoke it was with a feeling of intense regret that they were not reality.

Filled with gloom by the growing conviction that Friday, the thirteenth, was a hoodoo after all, the sergeant left his berth and started down the swaying Pullman aisle toward the washroom. He had taken only a few steps when he saw something that suddenly brought him to "In place, halt!" In a section just forward of his own there sat the owner of the black hair and the smiling blue eyes whose image had shared his dreams.

Like magic the sergeant's gloom vanished. "All bunk, this Friday, the thirteenth, stuff," he muttered as he made his toilet with unusual care and adjusted his uniform to a degree of perfection that would have amazed his superior officers. Then he hastened back to make sure that it was all true. Yes, the girl was still there. But although a lucky chance had thrown her in the same car with him, although she sat almost within reach of his hand, how was he ever going to meet her?

One look at her was enough to show that she was not the sort of girl who would respond to flirtatious advances. He was glad of that and yet sorry, but even if she had been of the flirty sort he would not have felt like making any such advances to her. He was, you see, already too deeply in love to risk anything that might lower him in the estimation of this fascinating feminine divinity. The girl's companion added to the perplexities of the sergeant's problem. She was an elderly woman, stern, forbidding and looking the last person in the world to encourage chance acquaintances.

By bold eavesdropping he learned that they were bound for San Francisco and that they intended to stop over for a day in New Orleans. The sergeant suddenly decided to stop over there, too.

When they left New Orleans that night they were, in spite of the hoodoo, again in the same car, but the opportunities for their meeting seemed no better than before.

It was not until the train was well on its way through Texas that Sergeant Walters spoke a word to the girl whom he had loved from that first glimpse on the station platform. And that word was spoken under circumstances most surprising.

Just before daybreak the rails spread and the speeding train plunged off the track. The cars rolled down an embankment, hurling the sleeping passengers from their berths and burying some of them in a mass of wreckage.

Sergeant Walters was hurled through a window and found himself, unhurt but slightly dazed, lying on the ground beside the overturned sleeper. His first thought was of the girl with the blue eyes.

Through the jagged glass of a broken window he climbed into the battered upset Pullman. He crawled along through the tangle of wreckage, making his way slowly and painfully in the darkness. Presently he heard far beneath him faint cries. He knew that voice—it was the voice of the girl he had been silently worshipping all these days.

For what seemed centuries he struggled desperately to lift the heavy seat which held her prisoner. It resisted all his efforts until he tore loose one of the heavy rods from which the berth curtains are suspended. Using this as a lever he managed to pry up the seat enough to get his stalwart shoulders under it.

At last he had her out and in the arms of the elderly woman who had escaped from the wreck unaided and was frantic with fear that the girl had been killed or badly hurt. This woman, as Sergeant Walters found out a minute later, was Mrs. Kelley, the girl's mother.

He brought blankets to cover the two women, shivering in their night clothes, and then returned to the wreck to see if there was anyone else to be rescued. But all the other passengers had safely made their escape. If Mr. Jinx really planned this wreck to further his wicked plans he had defeated his own purpose.

"Friday the thirteenth," smiled the sergeant to himself. "It's the luckiest day in the calendar!"

When the journey was resumed on another train even Mr. Jinx was powerless to prevent this strangely made acquaintance ripening into mutual love. Walters left the train at Douglas; Miss Kelley continued on to her home in San Francisco. There the sergeant visited her at every opportunity, and before many weeks he had won her promise to marry him.

Now Sergeant Walters's one desire was to "buy out" of the army in order to marry and settle down. He did not fancy life at an army post for his bride. And then Mr. Jinx began to get busy again. Walters found an order had been promulgated that prevented an enlisted man from "buying out."

A Photograph of the Train Wreck Where the Very Rocky Path of True Love Began for the Two.

The next Spring he was transferred to General Pershing's staff and served as the General's orderly on the long hike into Mexico.

Back from Mexico, the sergeant again tried to "buy out," and once more the hoodoo prevented. This was in March, 1917. The army, feeling that there was serious business ahead, was holding tight to its men. Within the next few months Sergeant Walters was half glad that Mr. Jinx had kept him with the colors, for in June the regiment was ordered to France. Walters was a real soldier and wouldn't have missed service abroad for anything in this world—except Florence Kelley.

Despite all the secrecy enshrouding troop movements, Miss Kelley heard the rumor that the Sixth was soon to leave for France. With a girl friend she went to Douglas in order to be near her lover as long as she might. He did not wish to marry her, now that war was declared, for he knew he might never come back. But at her insistence arrangements were made for a hasty wedding.

But when the hour for the ceremony arrived, the sergeant was on a troop-train speeding eastward. His bride-to-be did not hear the news until the regiment was already on board the train.

Miss Kelley started East on another train and reached Hoboken a few hours in advance of the troop train. She secured a priest and with him waited at the station. Soon after midnight the troop train arrived. A hurried search for the sergeant, a joyous meeting, and then—Mr. Jinx stepped in and spoiled everything. Miss Kelley had forgotten to secure a marriage license!

After duty with his regiment and as orderly on General Pershing's staff, Sergeant Walters went into Germany with the Army of Occupation. He returned to this country in July, 1919. Now that the war was over he and Miss Kelley, who had enlisted in the navy and seen active service as a first-class yeoman, decided to postpone their wedding until his enlistment expired. This, they expected, would be in the following October.

But they had reckoned without the merciless Mr Jinx, who seemed always at their shoulders. When the sergeant applied for discharge, he found that as peace had not yet been declared he would have to remain in the army for another year.

In February of this year Miss Kelley's father died, leaving her an estate whose management was a considerable burden. If ever she needed a helpmate it was now. Why wait until October for the sergeant's discharge? Why give the hoodoo the opportunity of throwing further obstacles in their path? Why not be married at once?

The sergeant soon yielded to these earnest pleadings of his sweetheart, and that is how King Cupid finally triumphed over the wicked Friday-the-thirteenth hoodoo after a heart-breaking struggle lasting nearly five years.

Sergeant Walters.

NOTICE

In the United States Court for China

Tsu Tse Wen (carrying on business under the name of Hoasun Iron Works) and The Steamer "Chang Ning" (sometimes known as the "Han Hwa") — In Admiralty.

Clerk.

Whereas a libel has been filed in the United States Court for China on the 26th day of August, 1920, by Tsu Tse-wen (carrying on business under the name of Hoasun Iron Works) against the Steamer "Chang Ning" (sometimes known as the "Han Hwa") her tackle, furniture and apparel, alleging in substance that on or about the 30th day of November 1919, the aforesaid libelant entered into a written agreement with the Yangtsze Transport and Supply Corporation, an American corporation and owners of the said Steamer "Chang Ning" (sometimes known as the "Han Hwa") to make certain repairs on said steamer, and to supply certain materials in connection with the said steamer "Chang Ning (sometimes known as the Han Hwa") and that the Yangtsze Transport and Supply Corporation has failed after repeated demands to pay the aforementioned libelant the sum of Shanghai Taels 14,816.53, which is a just and true debt, together with costs and interest thereon.

Now therefore in pursuance of the sanction under seal of the said Court, I do hereby give public notice to all persons claiming the said ship, her tackle, apparel and furniture or in any manner interested therein, that they be and appear before the said United States Court for China on the 21st day of September, 1920, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon then and there to interpose their claims, and to make their allegations in that behalf.

Singapore Rubber Auction

August 18 and 19, 1920.

Following were the prices realised at our auction this week:

	Singapore per lb.
SHEET	cents
S'pore Standard Ribbed	80½/78
Off Quality Ribbed	77½/58
Smoked Fine Plain	Nil
Smoked Good Plain	Nil
Unsmoked Fine Ribbed	Nil
Unsmoked Good Ribbed	Nil
Unsmoked Fine Plain	Nil
Unsmoked Good Plain	Nil
Cupwashing	48/43
CREPE
S'pore Standard 1st Latex	83½/80½
Off Color Latex	80/59
Fine Brown	57/52½
Good Brown	52/46
Good Dark	45½/38½
Barky	40/35
SCRAP
Virgin and Pressed	Nil
Loose	Nil

Catalogued for sale—1,920,030 lbs. (about 857 tons).

Sold—1,171,068 lbs. (about 522 tons).

Since our last report there has been a considerable improvement in prices for all grades. The advance here has been the outcome of London and New York advices, which have indicated a firmer position there, although the rise has generally been attributed to "bears" who have stepped in to cover short sales. Prices fluctuated considerably during the auctions, a number of speculators being anxious to buy both Standard Grades. Lower Grades sold at a heavy discount as compared to Standard Grades on account of the lack of support from manufacturers.

Standard Ribbed Smoked Sheet opened at about 80½ cents and gradually declined to 79 cents, showing an advance of 17 cents on the week.

Standard 1st Latex Crepe realised 83½ cents but declined later to 80½, showing an advance of 14 cents since last auction.

Fine Brown Crepe sold at last week's prices, but Good Browns and Darks made an advance of from 4 to 5 cents, and Bark Crepes about 2 cents.

At the continuation this morning 79½ cents was paid for Standard Sheet, but the market closed easier at about 77 cents.

SHANGHAI MUNICIPAL COUNCIL 6 PER CENT. STERLING LOAN, 1920.
Amount £750,000
Price of Issue £100 per cent.

UNDER the authority of Resolution VII passed at the Annual Meeting of Ratepayers on April 7, 1920, the Council hereby invites applications for Bearer Debentures (with coupons attached) in the 6 percent Sterling Loan of 1920, which is issued on the following terms:—

(1) Debentures to Bearer, with Sterling interest coupons attached, will be issued at £100 percent in denominations of £1,000, £500, £100 and £50.

(2) The Debentures of this issue will bear interest at the rate of 6 percent per annum, payable on June 30 and December 31 in each year by sterling demand draft on London at par, or in silver (local currency) at the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation's Shanghai current demand buying rate on London on date of presentation of the relative coupon. The first payment of interest will be made on December 31, 1920.

(3) Applications, accompanied by payment in full, will be received by the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation, No. 12 The Bund, on and after May 1, up to and including June 30, 1920, the Council reserving to itself the right of closing the subscription lists on any day previous to June 30, 1920, by Notification in the Municipal Gazette and Public Press of Shanghai.

(4) Payment on application will be accepted in Silver (local currency) at the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation's current selling T.T. rate on London and will bear interest from date of payment, or in Sterling by T.T. or Demand Draft on London. Interest on payments made in Sterling will only accrue from the date on which the relative remittances are received by the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation, London.

The cost of all telegrams involved through payment by Sterling T.T. shall be paid by the applicant.

Payment will be acknowledged by Banker's Receipt pending issue of the Debentures.

In the event of any applicant not being allotted the full amount applied for, the amount over-applied for will be repaid in full, plus interest at the rate of 6 percent per annum from the date payment was received in Shanghai or London to the due date of repayment in Shanghai, as notified to the applicant by special notice from the Council.

(5) The Loan will be redeemed at par on June 30, 1950, but may be redeemed by the Council in whole or in part on June 30, 1930, and/or on any subsequent date or dates on which the half-yearly interest is payable, subject to the Council giving six calendar months' notice in the Municipal Gazette and Public Press of Shanghai. In the event of any partial redemption of the loan the numbers of the Debentures to be redeemed will be decided by drawing. The numbers of such drawn Debentures will be notified in the Municipal Gazette and Public Press of Shanghai not less than three months prior to the date of repayment.

Application forms can be obtained on and after May 1, from the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation, No. 12 The Bund, or from the Treasurer and Comptroller, Finance Department, 24a Kiangse Road, to whom all enquiries should be addressed.

By order,
N. O. LIDDELL,
Secretary.

Buncombe

UNDER the caption "Constructive Politics," the New York Journal of Commerce on July 24 discussed some items of Senator Harding's program. The writer in the Journal of Commerce managed to work himself up into quite a glow but we must confess that the arguments he put forth strike us as artificial, rather dragged in by the heels because of a desire not to discuss the important issues of the campaign, and in fact, leave us in a cold sweat. For if the great political campaign in America is to be fought out and decided on the issues this writer digs up, we are in for a bad time of it. This is the editorial by the way which was sent in by the writer signing himself "A Wilsonian in 1916" whose letter was discussed in yesterday's issue of THE CHINA PRESS. Here it is:

"By far the most constructive and statesmanlike contribution that as yet has been made during the opening weeks of the present political campaign has come from Senator Harding. This is all the more pleasing because somewhat unexpected. We refer to his proposal, or rather promise, that he will, if elected, appoint a cabinet of men of outstanding ability, with whom he will work in close co-operation and whose advice he will seek and follow; furthermore, that he will raise the office of Vice President from one of high honor and little influence to that of a participating and effective leadership. While these proposals gained slight interest and little attention from most of our people, yet they are of striking significance to close observers of our Government and its working and worthy of the most careful and weighty consideration. They point to a reform that is of the greatest importance and which hardly has been appreciated by our past political leaders—able statesmen though they may have been.

"Owing to our system of 'separation of the powers' of government and administration our most serious lack has been that of unity, co-operation and co-ordination between our legislative and executive departments or even within the bounds of these departments themselves. Executive disintegration and lack of business efficiency has been a by-word at Washington for some years past and the same trouble has been made more extensive in our legislative department by the committee system in Congress. Fortunately, this latter is in decided process of reform by the recent actions of the Senate and House of Representatives, which have provided for the abolition or consolidation of numerous committees, especially those dealing with revenue and appropriation.

"Thirty-five years ago, while a student at Johns Hopkins University, President Wilson tersely summed up our governmental troubles by saying that we had too many sections of responsibility. 'Each branch of the Government is fitted out with a small section of responsibility, whose limited opportunities afford to the conscience of each many easy escapes.' The trouble may be illustrated by saying that (in our governmental and political activities) we are in the habit of using a shotgun in place of a rifle. President Wilson himself undertook the reform of this difficulty. His method has been that of a commander who uses a rifle, it is true, but who desires his army to stand back and obediently observe while he acts as an unerring sharpshooter. Of course, many 'hits' were made, but also just about as many 'misses,' and this mode of leadership was not at all conducive to the training or morale of the army, especially to that of his most trusted subordinates Neither did it always accomplish the general results intended. It is a saying among those long associated with our President that you can work for him but not with him. To these facts may be ascribed most of the mistakes and failures, as well as the successes, of the past seven years.

"What this country needs in its administration, above all else, is responsible party governments. This should operate in Congress by strong and united party action, unhampered by committee divisions and directed by leaders of ability who have won their positions through the test of successful experience and not by the mere process of time served upon a specific committee, as is the present rule for advancement. Capping this should be the President and a Cabinet of able men, working in close unity and harmony with Congress. This harmony can be furthered by the mutually tolerant attitude of the executive and legislative leaders, but it is here that the second part of Senator Harding's proposal would come into full play. The Vice President can be made a virtual Cabinet member, attend its meetings and be consulted on all questions of general policy. This would assure familiarity with the general administration on his part and stand him and the whole country in good stead in case he should at any time succeed to the office and responsibilities of President. But he also is presiding officer of the Senate, and a man of tact and mental weight would thus be in a position to act successfully as a go-between to bring the executive officials and the Congressional leaders into lines of co-operation. In some measure this was accomplished by the late Vice President Hobart during McKinley's first administration. It was done in a very quiet and unobtrustive way, but President McKinley's success at the time was in large part due to this sympathetic and effective aid on the part of his colleague.

"Very fortunately the country today has before it as candidates for the office of Vice President two men, one of whom is sure to be elected, and either of whom would be perfectly capable of fulfilling the new duties of his office as outlined above. Taken together, they are perhaps the best nominations for that office which have been made during the past ninety years or more. It may be that out of this campaign, which otherwise seems to be tending toward listless and languid interest on the part of the people, may come developments in governmental policy that will prove to be decisive in the growth of our national institutions.'

The writer of the above article was hardpressed in the matter of having to praise Harding, when he described the matter contained in it as "by far the most constructive and statesmanlike contribution" of the campaign. To ignore all the vital issues of the day, and select for praise the item in which Harding suggests that the vice-presidency be made somewhat more important, reveals to us merely a paucity of talking points. And yet this editorial so impressed one of our readers that he sent it to us with request for republication!

The writer then goes on to discuss our system of "separation of the powers" of government. It is an old argument, no more constructive now than at any other period, and our present system which Harding proposes to change has worked better than any other system of government yet devised by man.

Of course the writer is hitting at Wilson with the popular Republican form of argument that Wilson tried to seize too much power. You can run across this argument in any Republican paper. It has been the favorite mode of Republican attack on the Commander-in-Chief of our Army and Navy.

Our Constitution gives our President great powers in time of war and Wilson used them just as other presidents have used them and will use them. The charge that he did not work with Congress is amply disproved by the record. No President and Congress in the history of the United States ever worked more in accord and with better results than Wilson and the Democratic Congress did. Not until he couldn't even get a Republican Congress to deal with did the trouble start. And when you have a Democratic President and a Republican Congress trying to run in harness together you are bound to have trouble. Roosevelt couldn't even get a Republican Congress to work with him. And he was called a Dictator in his day, too. In view of these facts, what does "A Wilsonian of 1916" think of this paragraph from the editorial he sent in:

"What this country needs in its administration, above all else is responsible party government. This should operate in Congress by strong and united party action, unhampered by committee divisions and directed by leaders of ability who have won their positions through the test of successful experience and not by the mere process of time served upon a specific committee, as is the present rule for advancement." (We wish to interject the thought here that the writer defeats his own argument in the above when he demands "leaders of ability who have won their positions by successful experience" for how are they going to prove their worth and get their experience except by "process of time served upon a specific committee?" But to go on with the paragraph from which we are quoting): "Capping this should be the President and a Cabinet of able men working in close unity and harmony with Congress."

What this man now wants the country had. Wilson, his Cabinet and the Democratic Congress did their work in close unity and harmony. Where the country went wrong was when it took the Democratic Congress from Wilson and substituted a Republican one. How can you have responsible party government when the President and Cabinet are Democratic and the Congress is Republican? The writer we quote is merely talking so much buncombe and we are sorry he was able to mislead "A Wilsonian of 1916."

The quarrel of the American people is not with Wilson. It is with themselves for having failed to give him a Democratic Congress in 1918. The Republicans stopped all progress in the United States when they started their fight on Wilson. With a Democratic Congress who doubts today that the League of Nations Covenant and the Peace Treaty would have been ratified and all the present confusion both in Europe and America avoided?

Fabled Statues Of Japan

Unkei, the son of a fisherman, and in his youth an humble fisherman himself, was responsible for one of the most remarkable epochs in the history of Japanese wood sculpture. His name is a household word to the Japanese. The story is told by those who are supposed to know that the king of the underworld was very much irritated that Unkei had never done him justice, although the sculptor had attempted to carve his image many times. So when he died, the king of dead Buddhist souls sent Unkei back to earth, that, after having seen the god, he might make a faithful portrait. The result may be seen today in the temple Enno-ji at Kamakura, where Unkei's statue of Emma, cruel and savage in its strength, strikes terror into the hearts of all who fear to meet the judge of hell. There are many delightful legends about old statues of the gods. In the Hase Tema hill overlooking the bay, is a great gilded Kwannon of camphor wood—an eleven-faced image of the Goddess of Mercy—which for centuries has hearkened to the prayers of the fishermen. A long time ago, in that dim past when dragons were abroad in the land and gods condescended to play with men, some fishermen saw a great light shining out at sea. They sailed in their junk toward the light and found the image of Kwannon floating on the water. They dedicated a temple to the image and ever since have worshiped at her shrine. At the same time, a similar image of Kwannon, also made of camphor wood, floating in at Yamato and was placed in the Hase-no-Kwannon, a temple that was the favorite resort of courtiers in the Nara period. It is still today a popular temple for pilgrims, who come in the spring, when the cheeries are in full blossom and all the lanterns are lighted, to transport themselves back to the days when the gods were young.—Elsie F. Well in Asia Magazine.

POOR OLD FATHER

Poor father gets it from the most unexpected places, even from the cemetery. Certainly there is no taffy—no epitaphy, so to speak—handed him in the following inscription on a tombstone in Birmingham, England:

Here lies the mother of children seven,
Four on earth and three in heaven;
The three in heaven preferring rather
To die with mother than live with father.

Wood. B. Ryter is so keenly interested in the present correspondence that is stirring the hearts of the bachelors, and is breaking the hearts of the worried parents, that she is perforce driven to rhyme to treat the subject in a manner fit to appeal to our Shanghai girls. Herewith:

A PARENT'S LOT IS NOT AN EASY ONE

It is a Worried Parent writing letters to the Press.
His days are full of trouble and his nights are nothing less.
Although his lovely daughter has fully twenty years
She hasn't yet been married and it's moving him to tears.
It isn't that there are no men, there plenty hanging round
But when it comes to weddings there is no one to be found.
Although said Worried Parent has singled out a man
To welcome as a son-in-law, a member of the clan,
Not all the family secrets paraded for his view
Have brought out the proposal that is somewhat over-due.

* * *

And Worried Parent's not alone, an Anxious Mother, too.
With three fair daughters on her hands has troubles not a few.
She cannot find a place to sit, those beaux are everywhere,
And yet they will not come to time it is an awful care.
She's going to start a boycott for all "young men who won't".
When they look for invitations they will find wise mothers don't
Encourage idle trifling with no wedding bells in sight;
If men don't want to marry they had better say "Goodnight!"
But Worried Parent Number Two says all this isn't so,
She loves her little daughters and will hate to see them go.

* * *

No father worthy of the name would write in such a way.
A "brute" and an "unnatural pig" is all that she can say.
Another side is heard from—the Bachelor frees his mind.
He says he is "Seclusive" and these girls are not the kind
He wants to link his life to and he very plainly states
That "Eastern Girls" are butterflies and do not make good mates;
And so, though he is "eligible" he'll wait till he goes "Home"
To find a quiet lady and then no more he'll roam.
The Disillusioned Bachelor says girls are most unfair;
For "economic reasons" they will often set a snare
To entice unwary single men and gladly get engaged
But break the thing off sharply ere a marriage can be staged.

The men stand by each other; another rushes in
To say that he will marry when he can get some tin;
But after years of war's alarms he wants to see the town
And have a bit of holiday before he settles down.
The Hitherto Eluded says this all is beastly rot,
A girl will wed the man she wants whether he will or not.
Another counsels rationing the number of her beaux
To give the one occasion on which he may propose.
Now while the conflict rages we hope the girls will write
To give an Eager Public the merits of the fight.

Cox The Governor As Revealed In Official Records

DRY ENFORCEMENT

Prohibition was a topic in Governor Cox's message to the Eighty-third Ohio General Assembly, delivered on Jan. 13, 1919. Discussing the Eighteenth Amendment he said:

"There is no conflict between intent and phrase. The electorate has issued the mandate that intoxicating liquors as a beverage shall not be manufactured for sale, nor sold, and the responsibility of providing the means and method of law enforcement is with the Legislature.

"This amendment is not the expression of a caprice. The subject in question has been persistent as an issue for several years. Nothing can be more subversive of the public interest than indifference to or defiance of the organic law of the State.

"It has been suggested that the enforcement of the prohibition law be left to the communities and that the State content itself with the thought that local officials are sufficiently vigilant and the public interests will be safeguarded. It is respectfully urged upon you to give place to no such sophistry. The Constitution throughout the years has reserved broad police powers to the State. True, they have been delegated, but the mere assignment does not in the least degree reduce the responsibility of the State. On the other hand, the contention has been made that, inasmuch as the police power is first inherent in the State, and the prohibitory mandate is of such importance, the State alone should be the responsible unit. This is most unsound in theory and would be a dangerous practice. The spectacle of local officials paying no attention to the violation of the law on the theory that it was an affair of another Governmental unit would be a travesty. Reduced to plain terms, therefore, the enforcement of the law in the first instance should be with the public officers in the community, but a vigilant eye should be with the State, and power of removal from office should be given the Governor in case of delinquency."

HIS PROGRESSIVE REFORMS

When Governor Cox took the chair the Constitution of the State had just been changed in many important particulars. A convention had framed forty-two amendments, Of these thirty-four had been adopted at the special election held Sept. 3, 1912. A part of them went automatically into effect. Others granted the Legislature discretionary authority, while a third class was mandatory in nature. "There can be no justification for any departure from the intent of these amendments in the detail of legislative compliance," Governor Cox told the Assembly. "Much has been said for and against the Constitutional changes, but no unprejudiced person fails to recognise that their adoption is a distinct symptom of social and economic conditions."

The Legislature since then has appropriated $30,000 for an inquiry with a view to reorganisation of the State machinery (such as Governor Smith is attempting to bring about in New York) in response to Governor Cox's request. A blue sky law was passed at his request for the protection of investors, and he reported early in 1914 that there was "a well-organised attempt in this country to break down" such measures. He asked that the Ohio act be made less ambiguous and otherwise improved, that the judiciary system be reformed to eliminate legal delays, that a censorship of motion pictures be established. He urged, in fact, fifty-six progressive measures, practically all of which carried. "The new era in Ohio," Governor Cox called it.

AGAINST LOBBYISTS

One of the things Governor Cox wanted and got was a drastic anti-lobby law. He said that the person interesting himself in legislation should not object to registering. "If his activities be of such a nature," said the Governor, "that he does not care to reveal them in the manner indicated, then the public interest is obviously endangered. It is no more than a prudent safeguard to have it known what influences are at work with respect to legislation. There ought to be no temporising with this situation."

Apologising for calling the Assembly into special session to reduce the Ohio tax rate, Governor Cox said:

"The State tax duplicate has assumed such proportions, however, under the recent change in the methods of listing property, and the financial condition of the Commonwealth is so favorable, that the rate carried by the State levy cannot, with justification, be imposed this year.

"Needlessly to assess taxes from the communities is so repugnant to every idea of public policy that the small financial cost of bringing you together, and the personal inconvenience occasioned the members, are considerations vastly outweighed, I feel assured, both by the relief that can be afforded the people and the spirit of patriotism that possesses your honorable body.

"I therefore submit for your determination in this message the sole question of reducing the State tax levy."

This extraordinary condition existed in spite of unusual expenditure growing out of the emergencies of that administration. The flood catastrophe of 1913 cost the State approximately $1,000,000, while all bills incurred in the year 1912 by the Constitutional Convention—legal advertising, etc.,—were paid in 1913 for the reason that that was the first opportunity the Legislature had of making the necessary appropriation. In addition, deficiencies authorised by the Emergency Board in 1912, amounting to $234,359.65, had been taken care of the next year—1913—as had been the custom in the past.

Some of the effects of the new tax valuation system were described by Governor Cox, and helped explain the lower rate. "Under the operation of the new law," he said, "the Standard Oil Company, without protest, submitted to an increase in Hancock County this year of $10,000,000—the value of ten average townships in the State. The plain meaning of this is that the farmers in ten township have in the past been paying a large part of this company's taxes. In a large city a man whose name was never on the tax duplicate before was listed this year for $600,000 in Standard Oil stock. The average return by home owners in the workingmen's districts of that city is $1,000; so that 600 workmen have been paying this man's taxes for years—paying the policeman to guard him at night—paying the Fire Department that protected the roof under which he slept. This is more than injustice—it is a crime; and it is high time such practices came to an end in this State."

Concluding the message, the Governor said:

"By cutting the rate to 4500 mills it will be seen that the saving to the people in the new taxpaying year, beginning December, 1914, will be approximately $4,000,000. This reduction makes the State levy the lowest in the history of Ohio. In 1900 it was 2.84, or more than six times the levy now suggested. The new rate will be considerably less, than the rate in force at the beginning of this administration, notwithstanding it will carry almost $3,000,000 a year for good roads, a project that was never provided for in any previous levy. It is all a distinct triumph for decency in taxation, and means much for the general welfare of our communities."

HIS BUDGET SYSTEM

Governor Cox ran on a "budget platform," so that it is hardly necessary to repeat what he had to say in urging the Assembly to pass a bill providing for fiscal reform nor the arguments he used. The bill was passed. In his message of Jan. 9, 1917. Governor Cox told the Assembly, in effect, that economies under the budget system did not mean parsimony. His advice seems so sound as to be worth repeating here:

"In the authorisation of public expense you should be mindful of economy, and surround the State departments, so far as you can, with such checks and restraints as to prevent extravagance; but it should be a constructive and not a false economy. Let us speak plainly on this subject. Government under modern auspices is given enlarged functions. We are finding out that the Government which belongs to the people can render service to them which was not attempted under the old order. The inventive and experimental genius of man has been more generally and more intensively applied to this subject in the last decade than ever before, and in this evolutionary development provincialism is departed from, and the State is given new assignments upon the very sensible idea that the larger unit not only promotes efficiency but economy as well. If theory amounts to anything, it must have practical results, and what society exacts from Government it must pay for.

"Coming to the concrete: There is no economy in making inadequate provision for the wards of the State and if money were saved at the sacrifice of self-respect the circumstance would be a reproach to the Commonwealth. Our governmental unit conceived by an intelligent citizenship and builded on resource unsurpassed almost in its diversity and richness, will never claim the reverence it deserves unless in policy it is so sympathetic as to insure relief and measurable comfort for the weak and unfortunate. It is one thing to help those in unhappy plight and quite another duty to society to pursue an investigation that will supply a safe and effective direction of energy for the purpose of providing against conditions that needlessly help to fill our institutions. The Juvenile Research Bureau ought to be given the fullest opportunity to test its utility. Just as other States were anxiously awaiting the results in Ohio following its creation, the work was almost, if not entirely, abandoned. It should be restored.

"There is no economy in the ultimate in giving the Banking Department insufficient funds, because impaired regulation breeds neglect and one bank failure may carry a loss of ten times the amount save through unwise legislative provision."

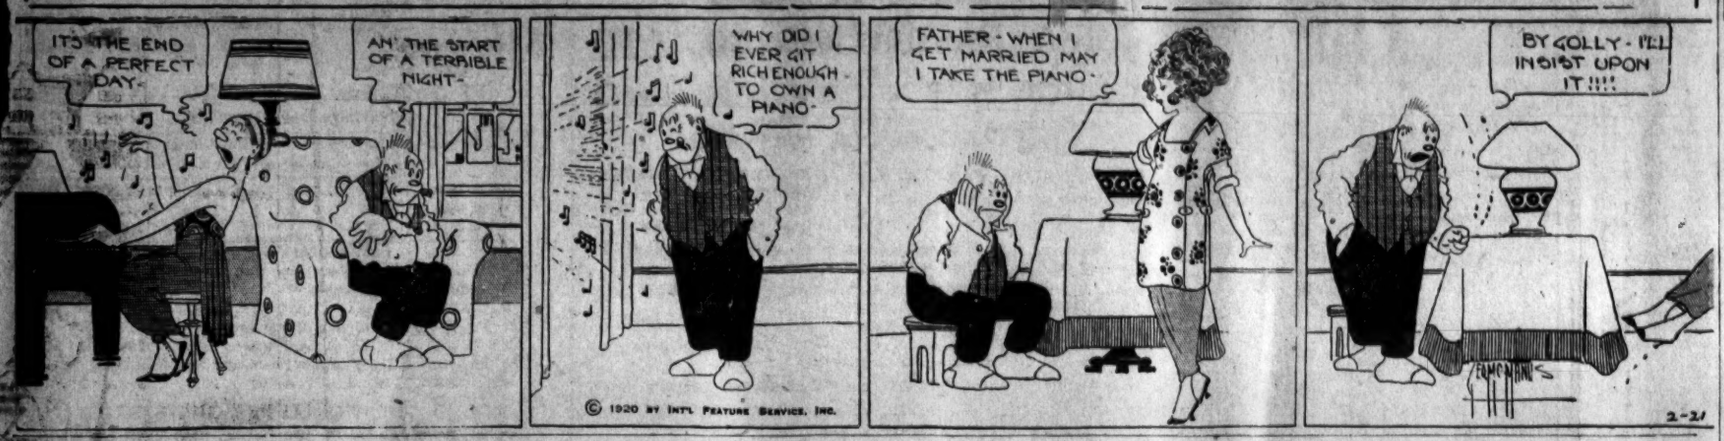
Bringing Up Father — By George McManus



Conservation Of Health

BY BRICE BELDEN, M. D.

Conservation of the health of industrial workers, often scorned in the past as an experiment or a fad by both employers and employes, is today recognised by both as of the utmost importance. To the employe it means higher physical tone, less time lost through sickness and disability, better working conditions, and, incidentally through these factors, a greater income.

To employer, it means increased production, greatly lessened labor turnover, and a mutual understanding between capital and labor.

With the present labor scarcity and high cost of living, industrial health measures are a factor neither side can afford to neglect.

The field of industrial health conservation, once limited largely to first aid and the reduction of industrial hazards, is now conceded to include all matters which conduce to the physical, mental and moral welware of the employe during working hours.

Particularly important is the mental and physical adjustment of the man to his job. The removal of remediable defects interfering with proper adjustment and consequent success in the industrial field is also important. Suitable recreational and educational facilities are taken into account, and sometimes even the preparation, or provision for, the right kind of food, properly cooked and served, is not overlooked.

Successful health conservation in industry can only be achieved by a form of self-government which is not paternalistic, administered through the intelligent co-operation of executive and worker and for the best interests of both.

It has been found possible to improve the physical condition of workers by eliminating those who would be a menace to themselves or others; by advising those not in a condition to work how they may improve their health, with the assurance of employment when physical conditions are corrected; by carefully placing those with slight physical defects in positions where these defects will not be aggravated; by periodic examinations to detect the approach of disease or breakdown and prevent them; and by caring for those who become sick while working for the company.

Women Must Be Patient, Says Lady Astor

BY LADY ASTOR

Woman suffrage can't be judged by the few elections that have been held within the lest year. It will take a generation, at least, before women's co-operation in public affairs can be calculated. Until then women must educate themselves and work steadfastly and patiently toward their goal, which includes not only equal political rights but a better social body.

Reforms come slowly. Only women can really reconstruct the world. All women should develop the best within them, study fearlessly the various issues at stake and act sincerely for the good of mankind.

I have always felt it was natural for women to take part in public life. My political career does not seem extraordinary to me. When my husband was in the House of Commons I worked for the same things that he represented.

Both of us wanted our district to be one of the best administered in England. When he left the Commons for the House of Lords, I became a candidate in order to keep up his work. My presence as the only woman member may seem strange to the other members, perhaps, but not to me, for I have ideas that I wish to see carried into life, and it is perfectly natural for me to stand up for them.

Woman must not try to force the issue. In political life they must work for whatever is best for the State. By their wisdom in dealing with vital problems they conquer ground for their own advancement. The two go hand in hand. The more educated woman is the better will her influence be. And as her influence becomes stronger and better, her rights will increase.

A New Era For Education

By Dr. Wm. A. McKeever

(Professor in University of Kansas and a Nationally Prominent Educator)

When your boy and girl go back to the class room next autumn they are almost certain to be met at the door by a type of "school ma'am" new to this country. For the first time, within this generation at least, the teacher is in a position to act as an aggressive and independent personality rather than as a tame and submissive nonentity.

Teachers' salaries have been forced up to something like a respectable standard and there are more jobs than claimants. One can resign almost any day and secure another place as good as the old one or better.

I am rejoiced to know teachers are organising for mutual protection and benefit. Hitherto the typical low salaried instructor has been meek and timid, inclined to bow to the superintendent and to kow tow to school board members to hold his appointment.

Your child and mine are now certain to feel the result of a new forceful and independent personality. They are likely to be called upon to come up to the mark and swing into line. And along with this red blood in the face of the teacher is certain to come more of a showing of red blood in the tissues of the child.

The dear-sweet-thing type of high-school freshman and sophomore—let us hope and pray—will now tend to disappear. And from the school as a dainty hot bed of tender culture we may expect to emerge as a welcome substitute an institution of intellectual belligerency, and that will fight its way into open affairs of every day society.

Yes, that raise from $50 to $150 per month, that membership in the federation—which means a safeguard against the autocracy of superintendents and boards of education—is certain to react favorably on the education of our children. Political influence and social standing will now count far less in securing special favors and professional ranking for our boys and girls. They are likely to be required to do the work and come up to the requirements all in one common movement.

The positive type of teacher instead of the negative, the aggressive attitude instead of the cringing—this means that favoritism is off and democracy is on in our public schools. Let us encourage the idea that all the children are to be ranked in accordance with merit, and without fear or favor. Let us encourage this idea of no cants, no pamperism, no favoritism, with the hope that the school may truly reflect and promote the best purposes of democracy.

It seems to me that the new Declaration of Independence which this peculiar age has invited the common teacher to adopt, is to become an epoch-making affair in the training of the child. Let us hail with delight this new educational era.

To Rescue The Drowning

BY BRICE BELDEN, M. D.

It is best not to attempt to deal with a drowning person struggling violently in the water, though one must grasp the first opportunity to seize him by the hair and throw him quickly on his back.

Then swim on your back while towing your charge, with his head resting on your chest. You will have to hold the head with one arm, while swimming with the other arm and the legs. It is possible for a vigorous person to maintain this position for quite a long time, until aid is received. If aid can be expected within a reasonable time it is best to support the victim easily, rather than to court exhaustion by violent efforts.

When the tide is running out it is imperative that the rescuer take things easily and not attempt to reach shore unaided. Failure to observe this precaution accounts for the tragic cases in which both parties lose their lives.

In getting the rescued one into a boat choose the stern if possible, in order to reduce the danger of capsising.

As soon as possible—in the boat or on the shore, as the case may be—turn the body face downward for a few seconds, keeping the head lower than the rest of the body, so as to allow water to escape from the mouth.

Loose the clothing about the neck and waist and wipe out the mouth. Pull the tongue well forward and hold it so: a towel wrapped around it will usually prevent slipping; if otherwise unmanageable a long pin may be passed through the tongue. If breathing has stopped artificial respiration must be started.

In Sylvester's method the operator kneels at the patient's head, grasps the elbows and draws them upward above the head as far as possible, until one, two, three can be counted slowly; the elbows are then carried downward and pressed firmly against the sides of the chest. Repeat fifteen times a minute until natural respiration is resumed.

A Come Down

"Go away from me!" said a fashionably-dressed woman to a tramp. "I would not have you touch me for a dollar." "I beg your pardon, I was only going to touch you for a copper, lady," came the reply.

Life Pills

The reason for the name "Life Pills" is understood by regular users of Dr. Ross' Life Pills. They have kept their systems clear of poisonous waste matter, and enjoy good appetite, good digestion, and good health. They are full of energy and ambition.

When you feel dull and depressed, do not wait until you are actually ill, but take Dr. Ross' Life Pills at regular intervals and keep yourself in good health and spirits.

For sale at all druggists.
